

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

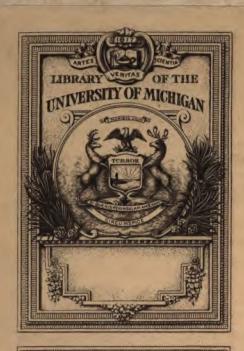

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

TO HIS TO

ROYAL HIGHNESS FREDERICK, Prince of WALES.

Your ROYAL HIGHNESS, imboldens Me to offer to Your Royal Patronage the following Account of the Proceedings and Debates of the Present Parliament.

READER.

THE following Sheets contain not on-ly all fuch Speeches as have appeared in Print, and upon Examination are found to be Genuine, (in which the Opinion of fome Gentlemen of the greatest Abilities in Parliamentary Knowledge have been confulted) but also a regular Account of all the most material Transactions of the House, with the feveral Divisions thereupon, compared by the Journals; likewife a Progreffive History of the Contested Elections, from the Numbers on the Poll, to the final Determination; and the last Resolutions of the House relating to the Right of Election; with an Account of the Constitution of feveral of the Boroughs. For this last Particular, I am chiefly obliged to that learned Antiquary, Mr Willis, in his Notitia Parliamentaria.

The

The Bookseller to the Reader.

The Reader, it is presum'd, will not be displeased to find some Notice taken of the most remarkable Domestic Incidents, during so Long and Important a Session, in which the Numbers Pro and Con upon every Question, were greater than ever known in the Memory of the oldest Member of the House.

It may not be amiss to observe farther, That all Proceedings on Private Bills, and even some, the passed as Publick, such as Turnpikes, Navigation-Bills, &c. are purposely omitted; since it is apprehended, the inserting them would only swell the Work, without affording any Entertainment to the Publick.

In the Course of the sormer Part of this Work, in twelve Volumes, from the Restoration to the Dissolution of the last Parliament, all the Particulars omitted in the Irish Collection, servilely copied by one Torback, are supplyed; a small Specimen of which I have already taken Notice of in the Contents of the first Five Volumes: And having carried the Number of Omissions to upwards of 1200, I presume That alone will be sufficient to shew what may be expected from their whole Personance; and therefore I doubt not the Continuance of the Approbation of the Publick in savour of my Edition.

N the 1st of December the King came to the House of Peers, and the Commons attending, the Lord The Parliament Chancellor fignified to them, that it was his Ma-meet. jesty's Pleasure they should return to their House, to elect a Speaker, and present him on Friday the 4th. Being return'd, Mr Henry Pelham flood up, and addressing himself to the Clerk of the House, spoke as follows:

Mr Harding, S we are here affembled, in Pursuance of the Royal Mr Pelham pro-Summons, it is necessary that in Obedience to his poses Mr Onslow Majetty's Command, and the established Custom of this for Speaker. House, we proceed immediately to the Choice of a Person qualified for the Chair.

Gentlemen,

It is with an uncommon Degree of Satisfaction that I observe this Assembly so numerous on the first Day, because whatever is transacted by us, must necessarily be considered by the Nation with more Regard, as it is approved by a greater Number of their Repretentatives; and because the prefent Affair, which relates particularly to this House must be more latisfactorily conducted, as our Number is greater,

An. 15. Geo. II. fince every Man must willingly abide by his own Choice, and chearfully submit to that Authority of which he has himself concurred to the Establishment.

'The Qualifications required in a Person who shall. fill the Chair to his own Reputation, and the Advantage of. the House, it is not necessary minutely to recount, it being. obvious to every Gentleman who hears me, that he must possess such an Equality of Temper, as may enable him. always to preserve a steady and impartial Attention, neither discomposed by the Irregularities into which some Gentlemen, unacquainted with the Forms of this House, may eafily fall, nor disconcerted by the Heat and Turbulence to which, in former Parliaments, some of those whose Experience might have taught them the Necessity of Decency, have been too often hurried by the Eagerness of Controverly. That he must add to this perpetual Serenity such a Firmness of Mind, as may enable him to repress Petulance, and subdue Contumacy, and support the Orders of the House, in whatever Contrariety of Opinions, or Commotion of Debate, against all Attempts of Infraction or Deviation. That to give Force to his Interpolitions, and procure Veneration to his Decisions, he must from his general Character and personal Qualities, derive such Dignity and Authority, as may naturally dispose the Minds of others to Obedience; as may suppress the Murmurs of Envy, and prevent the Struggles of Competition.

These Qualifications were eminently conspicuous in the Gentleman who silled the Chair * in the earlier Part of my Life, and who is now one of the Ornaments of the other House; such were his Abilities, and such his Conduct, that it would be presumptuous in any Man, however endowed by Nature, or accomplished by Study, to aspire to surpass him, nor can a higher Encomium be easily conceived, than this House bestowed upon that Person, who was thought worthy to succeed him.

The Office which we have now to confer, is not only arduous with regard to the Abilities necessary to the Execution of it, but extremely burthensome and laborious, such as requires continual Attendance, and incessant Application; nor can it be expected that any Man would engage in it, who is not ready to devote his Time and his Health to the Service of the Publick, and to struggle with Fatigue and Restraint for the Advantage of his Country.

The Hon. Sir Spencer Compton, Speaker of both the Parliaments of King George I. He was created Baron of Wilmington by his prefeat Majefty, Jan. 11. 1727—In May 1730, Viscount Pevensey, and Earl of Wilmington, and appointed Lord Privy Seal. On the 31st of December following declar'd President of the Council; and in 1733, elected'a Knight of the Garter.

Such

Such is the Gentleman whom I shall propose to your An. 15. Geo. II. Choice; one whose Zeal for the present Royal Family, and the Prosperity of the Nation, has been always acknowledged, and of whom it cannot be suspected that he will be deterred, by any Difficulties, from a Province which will afford him so frequent Opportunities of promoting the common Interest of the King and the People,

What Success may be e

What Success may be expected from his Endeavours, we can only judge from his present Influence; Influence produced only by his private Virtues, but so extensive in that Part of the Nation which lies within the Reach of his Beneficence, and the Observation of his Merit, that it sets him not only above the Danger, but above the Fear of Opposition, and secures him a Seat in this House without Contest.

'Thus deputed by his Country to many fuccessive Parliaments, he has acquired an unrivalled Degree of Knowledge in the Methods of our Proceedings, and an eminent Dexterity in digesting them, with that Order and Perspicuity by which only the Transaction of great Affairs can be made expeditious, and the Discussion of difficult Questions be disentangled from Perplexity; Qualities, which are now made particularly necessary by the Importance of the Subjects to be considered in this Parliament, so that I doubt not but you will unanimously concur with me in defiring that the Chair may be filled by a Person eminently distinguished by his Knowledge, his Integrity, his Diligence, and his Reputation: And therefore I move, without Scruple, that the Right Hon. Arthur Onslow, Esq. be called to the Chair.'

Mr Pelham was seconded by Mr Clutterbuck.

M. Clutterbuck.

Gentlemen,

That I am not able to add any Thing to the Encomium on the Right Hon. Gentleman nominated to the Speaker's Chair, gives me no Concern; because I am consident that in the Opinion of this Assembly his Name alone includes all Panegyric, and that he who recommends Mr Onstow, will never be required to give the Reason of his Choice. I therefore rise now only to continue the common Methods of the House, and to second a Motion which I believe nobody will oppose.

Upon this there was a general Acclamation of Mr Onflow, Mr Onflow. Hereupon Mr Onflow excus'd himself as follows:

Gentlemen,

'Though I might alledge many Reasons against this Mr Onslow ex-Choice, of which the strongest is my Inability to discharge cuses himself, the Trust conferred upon me in a Manner suitable to its Im-

D 2 portance

An. 15. Geo.II. portance, yet I have too high an Idea of the Wisdom of this Assembly, to imagine that they form any Resolution without just Motives; and therefore shall think it my Duty to comply with their Determination however opposite to my own Opinion.

He is elected Speaker,

Then Mr Pelham and Mr Clutterbuck conducted him to the Chair, where, before he went up, he desired, ' That the House would consider how little he was qualified for the Office which they were about to confer upon him, and fix their Choice upon some other Person, who might be capable of discharging so important a Trust.'

But the Members again calling out, The Chair, the Chair, the Chair, he then address'd himself thus to the House.

Gentlemen,

Since it is your Resolution that I should once more receive the Honour of being advanc'd to this important Office. for which it is not necessary to mention how little I am qualified: Since I hope that those Desects which have hitherto been excused, will still find the same Indulgence; my Gratitude for a Distinction so little deserved, will always incite me to consult the Honour of the House, and enable me to supply, by Application and Diligence, what I am wanting in Knowledge and Capacity.'

And presented to his Majesty.

Accordingly on the 4th Mr Onflow, the Speaker, was presented to the King: His Majesty having approv'd the Choice of the House, made the following Speech:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

The King's Speech at opening the First Scilion of the Ninth Parliament of Great Britain.

"In is always a great Satisfaction to me to meet you affembled in Parliament; and especially at this Time, of when the Posture of Affairs makes your Counsel and "Affistance so necessary; and when by Means of the new " Elections, I may have an Opportunity of knowing the " more immediate Sense and Disposition of my People in " general, from their Representatives, chosen during a Seaof fon, which has been attended with great Variety of In-" cidents of the highest Consequence and Expectation, and " during the Course of the War, in which we are engaged " against the Crown of Spain; a War, in itself just and " necessary, entered into by the repeated Advice of both " Houses of Parliament, and particularly recommended to " me to be carried on in America, which has been may " principal Care. I can therefore make no Doubt, but that you are met together fully sensible of our present Situation; and prepared to give me such Advice, as shall 16 be most conducive to the Honour, and true Interest of " my Crown and Kingdoms.

"You cannot but have observ'd, with an Attention suit- An. 15. Geo. II. " able to the Occasion, the impending Dangers that threaten " Europe, and more immediately fuch Parts of the Conti-" nent, as shall withstand or relist the formidable Powers, " which are confederated for the Subversion, or Reduction " of the House of Austria. The Apprehension of these "Things was communicated to the last Parliament; when " both Houses expressed their great Concern for the Troubles, " which were then broke out in the Austrian Dominions; " and came to the strongest Resolutions in favour of the " Queen of Hungary, for the Maintenance of the Pragmatic "Sanction, and for the Preservation of the Balance of 16 Power, and the Peace and Liberties of Europe. And " had other Powers, that were under the like Engagements " with me, answered the just Expectations they had so " folemnly given, the Support of the Common Cause had " been attended with less Difficulty.

"I have, pursuant to the Advice of my Parliament,
"ever fince the Death of the late Emperor, exerted my"felf in the Support of the House of Austria. I have endeavoured, by the most proper and early Applications, to induce other Powers, that were equally engaged with me, and united by Common Interest, to concert such Measures as so important and critical a Conjuncture required; and where an Accommodation seemed to me to be necessary. I laboured to reconcile those Princes, whose Union would have been the most effectual Means to prevent the Mischiefs that have happened, and the best Security for the Interest and Safety of the Whole.

"Although my Endeavours have not hitherto had the defired Effect, I cannot but still hope, that a just Sense of the common and approaching Danger, will produce a more savourable Turn in the Councils of other Nations. In this Situation it is incumbent upon us to put ourselves in a Condition to improve all Opportunities that shall offer for maintaining the Liberties of Europs; and to assist and support our Friends and Allies, at such Times, and in such Manner, as the Exigency and Circumstances of Affairs shall require; and to defeat any Attempts that thall be made against me, and my Dominions, or against those whom we are most nearly concerned for, and, in Honour and Interest, engaged to support and defend.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I have, during the Course of my Reign, had so much 44 Experience of the Duty and Affection of my Parliaments " to my Person and Government, and of their Zeal for the " Good of their Country, and the Support of the Common " Cause, that I do, with the greatest Reason, rely upon " the Continuance of them, in the present Conjuncture. Mr Speaker,

To address the Throne on the present Occasion, is a Custom, which, as it is founded on Reason and Decency, has always been observed by the Commons of Great Britain, nor do I suspect this House of any Intention to omit those Forms of Respect to his Majesty, which our Ancestors always paid even to Princes whole Conduct and Defigns gave them no Claim to Reverence or Gratitude.

' To continue therefore, Sir, a Practice which the Nature of Government itself makes necessary, and which cannot but be acknowledged to be in a peculiar Degree proper under a Prince, whose personal Virtues are so generally known, I hope for the Indulgence of this House in the Liberty which I shall take of proposing an Address to this

. To return his Majesty the Thanks of this House, for his most gracious Speech; and to congratulate his Majesty's Return; to express our dutiful Acknowledgments for his * paternal Concern for the publick Welfare, in the present dange-his Majelty, that as great Variety of Incidents of the greateft Importance have happen'd, during the Course of the last Year, this House, with Hearts full of Duty and Gratitude, and touch'd with a just Sense of the impending Dangers, will, as often as these momentous Affairs shall come under their Confideration, give his Majesty such Advice as becomes dutiful and faithful Subjects, and fuch Support and Affiftance, as shall be most conducive to the Honour and true Interest of his Majesty's Crown and Kingdoms, and to the maintaining of the Balance and Liberties of Europe; fto return his Majesty the Thanks of the House for his Royal Care in profecuting the War with Spain and that, in Order to answer these great and necessary Purposes, this · House will grant such effectual Supplies, as shall enable his Majesty to support and affist his Friends and Allies, at cumstances of Affairs shall require; and to defeat any Attempts that shall be made against his Majesty, or against " those, who being equally engag'd with his Majesty by the fuch Times and in fuch Manner as the Exigency and Cir-

Faith of Treaties, or united by common Interest, shall, from a just Sense of the common Danger, be willing to concert such Measures, as shall be found expedient.

This Address, which in my Opinion will contain both a proper Answer to his Majesty's Speech, and a decent Declaration of our Gratitude and Duty, will not, I hope, be opposed. For furely it cannot be charged with afferting any Thing that is either false or mean, with bestowing any unnecessary Panegyric, or with maintaining any Fact that is not generally allowed.

Mr Herbert was seconded by Mr Trevor, as follows: Mr Trevor.

As the Necessity of an Address to his Majesty cannot be disputed, the only Question on this Occasion must be, whether the Address now proposed be such as it may become this House to offer in the present Conjuncture of Affairs.

In an Address, Sir, it is necessary to preserve at once the Respect due to our Sovereign, and the Dignity which may justly be assumed by the Representatives of the People of Great Britain, a People whose Birthright gives them a Claim to approach their Sovereign, not indeed without the utmost Respect, but with Language, which absolute Monarchs never hear from the Slaves by whom they are fur-

'This Respect and Dignity appear to me to be very happily united in the Address now proposed, in which we join

An. 16. Geo. II. with our Professions of Duty, our Offers of Advice, and affert our Claim to the Direction of the national Expences by our Promife to grant the necessary Supplies.

Debate thereon.

' As there cannot therefore in my Opinion, Sir, be any thing added to the Address now offered, and there appears to me no Necessity of any Alteration or Omission, I second the Motion.

Lord Noel Somerlet.

Hereupon Lord Noel Somerfet flood up and fpoke as follows;

'Tho' I am far from intending to lessen, by trifling Objections, the Zeal which the honourable Gentleman who proposed the Address has shewn for promoting the publick Basinels, yet, as it is very inconsistent with the Duty of a Member of this House to prefer Civility to Truth, and to facrifice to Ceremony or Complaifance the Interest of his Country, I think it necessary to declare my Opinion, that though the Address proposed may admit of many Amendments, which I leave to other Gentlemen to make, I think the Addition of one Clause absolutely necessary; That his Majesty may be desired not to engage this Nation in a War for the Preservation of his Foreign Dominions; Dominions which, as they are in themselves independent on the Crown of Great Britain, and govern'd by different Laws, and by a different Right, have been feperated by an express Clause from these Kingdoms, in the Act " to which his Majesty owes his Title to the Throne.

'This Request, Sir, is at this Time particularly expedient when the Continent is in Confusion, and the Territories of Hanover are endangered by the Approach of the French Forces. Besides, as nothing is more fatal than groundless Expectations of Assistance, it may contribute to the Safety of that People, to shew them that they are to depend upon their own Strength, to call their Forces together, to fortify their Towns, and guard their Avenues; and that, if they fit indolent and carelefs, in Confidence that the Power of Great Britain will be employ'd in their Defence, they will only give their Enemies an eafy Conquest, and enslave themfelves and their Posterity to a Foreign Power: I move therefore that his Majesty be defired in our Address, not to engage these Kingdoms in a War for the Preservation of bis Foreign Dominians,

^{*} By the Act 12 and 13 Will. III. For the further Limitation of the Crimin, and the hetter fecuring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, it was Enacted, ' That in case the Crown should come to any Person, not being a Native of England, this Nation shall not be obliged to War for Defence of Dominions not belonging to this Crown.

Lord Nacl Somerfet was seconded by Mr Shippen thus:

An. 15. Geo. II. 1741.

· I know not how successfully I may repeat Affertions in Mr Shippen. this House, for which I have formerly been censured *, and which few other Members have hitherto maintained; but I rife with Confidence that I shall be at least acknowledged to act confishently with my felf in seconding the noble Person who spoke last; and I am convinced, that many who differ from me in Opinion, would be glad to boalt of refembling my Steadiness of Conduct.

But Steadiness, Sir, is the Effect only of Integrity; he that speaks always what he thinks, and endeavours by diligent Inquiry to think aright before he ventures to declare his Sentiments; he that follows, in his Searches, no Leader but Reason, nor expects any Reward from them but the Advantage of discovering Truth, and the Pleasure of communicating it, will not eafily change his Opinion, because it will feldom be easy to shew that he who has honestly enquired after Truth, has failed to attain it.

' For my Part, I am neither ashamed nor afraid to assirm that thirty Years have made no Change in any of my political Opinions; I am now grown old in this House, but that Experience which is the Confequence of Age has only confirmed the Principles with which I enter'd it many Years ago; Time has verified the Predictions which I formerly utter'd, and I have feen my Conjectures ripen'd into Know-

· I should be therefore without Excuse if either Terror could affright, or the Hope of Advantage allure me from the Declaration of my Opinions; Opinions which I was not deterred from afferting, when the Prospect of a longer Life than I can now expect, might have added to the Temptations of Ambition, or aggravated the Terrors of Poverty and Difgrace; Opinions, for which I would willingly have fuffer'd the severest Censures, even when I had espoused them only in Compliance with Reason, without the infallible Certainty of Experience.

Of Truth it has been always observed. Sir, that every Day adds to its Establishment, and that Falshoods, however specious, however supported by Power, or established by Confederacies, are unable to tland before the Stroke of Time: Against the Inconveniencies and Vexations of long Life

An. 15. Geo. II. Life, may be fet the Pleature of discovering Truth, perhaps the only Pleasure that Age affords. Nor is it a flight Satisfaction to a Man not utterly infatuated or deprayed, to find Opportunities of rectifying his Notions, and regulating his Conduct by new Lights.

- But much greater is the Happiness of that Man to whom every Day brings a new Proof of the Reasonableness of his former Determinations, and who finds, by the most unerring Test, that his Life has been spent in promoting Doctrines beneficial to Mankind. This, Sir, is the Happiness which I now enjoy, and for which those who never shall attain it, must look for an Equivalent in lucrative Employments, honorary Titles, pompous Equipages, and splen-

Sir, are the Advantages which are to be gained by a feafonable Variation of Principles, and by a ready Compliance with the prevailing Fashion of Opinions; Advantages which I indeed cannot envy when they are purchased at fo high a Price, but of which Age and Observation has too frequently shown me the unbounded Influence; and to which I cannot deny that I have always ascribed the Instability of Conduct, and Inconsistency of Assertions which I have discovered in many Men, whose Abilities I have no Reason to depreciate, and of whom I cannot but believe they would eafily diffinguish Truth, were not Falshood recommended to them by the glittering Ornaments of Wealth and Power.

For there is a Degree of Wickedness which no Reproof or Argument can reclaim, as there is a Degree of Stupidity which no Instruction can claring my Opinion, and be once more treated as a Criminal An. 15 Geo. 11. for afferting what they who punish me cannot deny; for maintaining the Inconfishency of Hanoverian Maxims with the Happinels of this Nation, and for preferving the Caution which was fo strongly inculcated by the Patriots that drew up the Act of Settlement, and gave the present Royal Family their Title to the Throne.

These Men, Sir, whose Wisdom cannot be disputed, and whole Zeal for his Majesty's Family was equal to their Knowledge, thought it requisite to provide some Security against the Prejudices of Birth and Education. They were far from imagining, that they were calling to the Throne a Race of Beings exalted above the Frailties of Humanity, or exempted by any peculiar Privileges from Error or from

'They knew that every Man was habitually, if not naturally, fond of his own Nation, and that he was inclined to enrich it and defend it at the Expence of another, even, perhaps, of that to which he is indebted for much higher Degrees of Greatness, Wealth and Power; for every Thing which makes one State of Life preferable to another, (and which therefore, if Reason could prevail over Prejudice, and every Action were regulated by strict Justice) might claim more Regard than that Corner of the Earth in which he only happened to be born.

They knew, Sir, that Confidence was not always returned, that we most willingly trust those whom we have longest known, and caress those with most Fondness, whose Inclinations we find by Experience to correspond with our own, without regard to particular Circumstances which may entitle others to greater Regard or higher Degrees of Credit or of Kindness.

Ignorance.

'To obviate the Disposition which a foreign Race of Princes might have to trutt their original Subjects, it was enacted that none of them should be capable of any Place of Trust or Profit in these Kingdoms. And to hinder our Monarchs from transferring the Revenues of Great Britain to Hanover, and enriching it with the Commerce of our Traders, and the Labours of our Hulbandmen; from raising Taxes to augment the Splendor of a petty Court, and encreating the Garrisons of their Mountains by misapplying that Money which this Nation should raite for its own De-1741. hould never return to his native Dominions, but rende always in this Kingdom, without any other Care than that of gaining the Affections of his Britifb Subjects, preserving their Rights and encreasing their Power.

It was imagined by that Parliament that the Electorate of Hanover, a subordinate Dignity held by Custom of Homage to a greater Power, ought to be thought below the Regard of the King of Great Britain, and that the Sovereign of a Nation like this, ought to remember a lower State only to heighten his Gratitude to the People by whom he was exalted. They were far from imagining that Great Britain and Hanover would in Time be considered as of equal Importance, and that our Sovereign would divide his Years between one Country and the other, and please himfelf with exhibiting in Hanover, the annual Show of the Pomp and Dignity of a King of Great Britain.

'This Clause, Sir, however, a later Parliament readily repealed; † upon what Motives I am not able to declare, having never heard the Arguments, which prevailed upon their Predecessor to enact it, consuted or invalidated; nor have I found that the Event has produced any Justification of their Conduct, or that the Nation has received any remarkable Advantage from our Royal Expeditions.

There is another Clause in that important Act which yet the Parliament has not adventured to repeal, by which it is provided, that this Nation shall not be engaged in War for the Defence of the Hanoverian Dominions; Dominions of which we can have no Interest in the Protection or Prefervation, Dominions perhaps of no great Value into whatever Hands Chance and Negligence may throw them, which their Situation has made entirely useless to naval Power, but which, though they cannot benefit, may injure us by diverting the Attention of our Sovereign, or witholding his Affections.

"Whether this Clause, Sir, has not sometimes been eluded, whether the fix thousand Hessians which we once supported were of Use to any of the British Dominions, and whether a double Number of the same Nation now paid paid with our Money for the Defence of the Queen of Han-An. 15. Geo. II. gary, have not been stationed only where they might defend Hanover, without the least Advantage to our Confederates, whether the Nation has not been condemned to double Expences in the Support of this Alliance, by raising for the Queen's Service Troops which were only employed in the Protection of Hanover, and then in succouring her with pecuniary Supplies, it is perhaps at present unnecessary, though I hope, not yet too late to enquire.

It is at present unnecessary, because the Clause which is proposed cannot be denied to be equally proper, whether the Act of Settlement has been hitherto observed or violated; for the Violation of it ought to engage us in some Measures that may secure us for the Future from the like Injury, and the Observation of it is a manifest Proof how much it is approved by all Parties, since in so many Deviations from this Settlement, and the Inconstancy of Conduct of which an Example is scarcely to be sound, this Law has been esteemed sacred, the Bulwark of our Rights, and the Boundary which the sovereign Power hath not dared to exceed.

As his Majesty, Sir, has in a very solemn Manner, called upon us for our Advice and Assistance, what can be more proper than to lay before him our Opinion on this important Question? War is next to Slavery one of the greatest Calamities, and an unnecessary War therefore the greatest Error which cannot be too cautiously obviated, or too speedily reformed.

If we confider, Sir, the present State of the Continent, there is nothing more probable than that the Subjects of the Elector of Hanover may solicit the Assistance of the King of Great Britain, and therefore it is necessary to inform them, that their Solicitations will be vain. If we enquire into the Suspicions of our Fellow-Subjects, we shall find them generally disturbed with Fears that they shall be facrificed to the Security of Foreign Dominiona, and therefore it is necessary to recal their Assection to his Majesty where it is impaired, and confirm their Considence where it has been hitherto preserved, by shewing in the most publick Manner, how vainly they have been disquieted, and how grossy they have been mittaken.

"It is certainly our Duty, Sir, to give such Advice as may most truly inform his Majesty of the Sentiments of his People, and most effectually establish in the People an Adherence to his Majesty; as it is certain that no Advice will be seconded by greater Numbers than that which I now propose, nor can his Majesty by any Act of Goodness so much endear

An. 15. Geo. II. his Government as by a ready Promife to this Nation of an 1741. Exemption from any War in Defence of Hanover.

I hope, Sir, it will not be objected that by such Request a Suspicion will be infinuated of Designs detrimental to the British Nation, and repugnant to the Conditions on which his Majesty ascended the Throne, because an Objection of equal Force may rise against any Advice whatever that shall be offered by Parliament. And it may be always urg'd, that to recommend any Measures, is to suppose that they would not have been suggested to his Majesty by his own Wisdom, and by Consequence that he is desective either in Knowledge or in Goodness, that he either mistakes or neglects the Interest of his People.

'Thus, Sir, may the most laudable Conduct be charg'd with Sedition, and the most awful Regard be accused of Discresseet, by forced Consequences, and exaggerated Language; thus may Parliaments become useless, lest they should appear to be wifer than their Sovereign, and the Sovereign be condemn'd to act only by the Information of service Ministers, because no publick Advice can safely be given

- That Kings must act upon the Information of others, that they can see little, with their own Eyes, through the Mists which Flattery is continually employ'd in raising before them, and that they are therefore most happy who have, by the Constitution of the Country which they govern, an Opportunity of knowing the Opinions of their People without Disguise, has yet never been denied by any who do not seperate the Interest of the King from that of the People, and leave Mankind no political Distinction but that of Tyrants and Slaves.
- This, Sir, is the Happiness of the King of Great Britain beyond other Monarchs, an Advantage by which he may be always enabled to contemplate the happy and flourishing State of his Subjects, and to receive the Blessings and Acclamations of Millions that owe to his Care their Wealth and their Security.
- Of this Advantage he cannot be depriv'd but by the Cowardice, or the Treachery of those Men who are delegated by the People, as the Guardians of their Liberties: and surely it requires no uncommon Penetration to discover, that no Act of Treason can be equal in Malignity to that Persidy, which deprives the King of the Assections of his Subjects, by concealing from him their Sentiments and Petitions. He that makes his Monarch hated must undoubtedly make him unhappy, and he that destroys his Happiness might more innocently take away his Life.

To exempt myself therefore from such Guilt, to dis-An. 15. Geo. II. charge the Trust conferred on me by my Country, and to 1741. perform the Duty which I owe to my King, I stand up to fecond this Motion.

Mr Gybbon spoke next:

Mr Gybbon.

As it is not easy to remember all the Parts of an Address by only once hearing it, and hearing it in a Porm different from that in which it is to be presented. I think it necessary to a more accurate Consideration of it, that it should be read distinctly to the House. We may otherwise waste our Time in Debates, to which only our own Forgetfulness gives Occasion, we may raise Objections without Reason, and propose Amendments where there is no Desect.

The Motion for the Address being accordingly read, Mr

Gybbon went on:

Sir,

Having now heard the Address, I find by Experience the Propriety of my Proposal, having remark'd a Clause, which, in my Opinion, is necessarily to be amended, and which I had not observ'd when it was repeated before.

It is well known, that the Speeches from the Throne, though pronounc'd by the King, are always confider'd as the Compositions of the Ministry, upon whom any salse Assertions would be charged, as the Informers and Counsellors of the Crown.

It is well known likewise, that whenever this House returns Thanks to the King for any Measures that have been pursued, those Measures are supposed to be approved by them, and that Approbation may be pleaded by the Minister in his Desence, whenever he shall be required to answer for the Event of his Councils.

It is therefore, in my Opinion, extremely unreasonable to propose, that Thanks should be return'd to his Majesty for his Royal Care, in prosecuting the War against Spain; for what has been the Consequence of that Care, for which our Thanks are to be with so much Solemnity return'd; but Defeats, Disgrace, and Losses, the Ruin of our Merchants, the Imprisonment of our Sailors, idle Shews of Armaments, and useless Expences?

What are the Events which are to be recorded in an impartial Account of this War; a War provoked by so long a Train of Insults and Injuries, and carried on with so apparent Inequality of Forces? Have we destroy'd the Fleets of our Enemies, fir'd their Towns, and laid their Fortresses in Ruins? Have we conquered their Colonies, and plunder-

An. 15. Geo. II. ed their Cities, and reduc'd them to a Necessity of receding from their unjust Claims, and repaying the Plunder of car Merchants? Are their Ambassadors now solliciting Peace at the Court of Great Britain, or applying to the neighbouring Princes to moderate the Resentment of their victorious Enemies?

- ' I am afraid that the Effects of our Preparations, however formidable, are very different; they have only raised Difcontent among our Countrymen, and Contempt among our Enemies. We have shewn that we are strong indeed, but that our Force is made ineffectual by our Cowardice; that when we threaten most loudly, we perform Nothing; that we draw our Swords but to brandish them, and only wait an Opportunity to sheath them in such a Manner, as not plainly to confess that we dare not strike.
- ' If we confider, therefore, what Effect our Thanks for Conduct like this must naturally produce, it will appear that they can only encourage our Enemies, and dispirit our Fellow-Subjects. It will be imagined that the Spaniards are a powerful Nation, which it was the highest Degree of Rathness to attack, a Nation by whom it is Honour sufficient not to be overcome, and from whom we cannot be defended without the most vigilant Caution, and the most extensive Knowledge both of Politicks and War.
- It will readily be perceiv'd by the proud Spaniards, that it is only necessary to prosecute their Views a little longer, to intimidate us with new Demands, and amuse us with new Preparations; and that we, who are already fatisfied with our Success, shall soon be weary of a War from which it is plain that we never expected any Advantage, and therefore shall in a short Time willingly receive such Terms as our Conquerors will grant us.
- ' It is always to be remember'd how much all human Affairs depend upon Opinion, how often Reputation supplies the Want of real Power, by making those afraid who cannot be hurt, and by producing Confidence where there is no Superiority. The Opinion which the Parliament ought to eadeavour to promote, is a Confidence in their Steadiness, Honefty, and Wisdom, a Confidence which will not be much advanc'd by an Address of Thanks for the Conduct of the War against Spain.
- How juftly may it be asked, when this Address is spread over the World, what were the Views with which the Parliament of Great Britain petition'd their Sovereign to declare War against Spain?
- ' If their Design was, as they then afferted, to procure Security for the Commerce of the West Indies, and Reparation for the Injuries which their Merchants had received, An. 15. Geo.II. by what Fluctuation of Counfels, by what Prevalence of new Opinions have they now abandon'd it? For that they have no longer the fame Intentions, that they now no more either propose Security, or demand Recompence, is evident, fince tho' they have obtained neither, yet are they thankful for the Conduct of the War.

To what can this apparent Instability be imputed, but to the Want either of Wisdom to balance their own Power with that of their Enemies, and discern the true Interest of their Country; or to a mean Compliance with the Clamours of the People, to whom they durst not resule the Appearance of a War, though they had no Expectation of Honour or Success?

But in far other Terms, Sir, will the Spaniards speak of the Address which is now proposed. " Behold, say our boasting Enemies, the Spirit and Wisdom of that Assembly, whose Counsels hold the Continent in Suspense, and whose Determinations change the Fate of Kingdoms, whose Vote transfers Sovereignty, covers the Ocean with Fleets, prefcribes the Operation of distant Wars, and fixes the Balance of the World: Behold them amused with idle Preparations. levying Money for Mockeries of War, and returning Thanks for the Pleasure of the Show. Behold them looking with wonderful Tranquility on the Lofs of a great Number of their Ships, which have been feiz'd upon their own Coalls by our Privateers, and congratulating themselves and their Monarch, that any have been preferv'd. How great would have been the Exultation, and how loud the Applauses, had they succeeded in any of their Designs? Had they obstructed the Departure of our Fleets, or hindred our Descent upon the Dominions of the Queen of Hungary; had they confin'd our Privateers in our Harbours, defeated any of our Troops. or over-run any of our Colonies? In what Terms would they have expressed their Gratitude for Victory, who are thus thankful for Disappointments and Disgrace ?"

an Address like that which is now proposed; Remarks which we and our Allies must be condemn'd to hear without attempting a Reply. For what can be urg'd to extenuate the Ridicule of returning Thanks where we ought either to express Resentment, offer Consolations and propose the Means of better Success, or cover our Grief and Shame with perpetual Silence?

When it shall be told in Foreign Nations, that the Parliament of Great Britain had return'd Thanks for the Escape of the Spaniards from Ferrol, their uninterrupted Ex-Vol. XIII. An. 15. Geo. II. pedition to Italy, the Embarrassiment of their own Trade, the Captivity of their Sailors, and the Destruction of their Troops, What can they conclude but that the Parliament of Great Britain is a Collection of Madmen, whom Madmen have deputed to transact the publick Affairs? And what must be the Influence of such a People and such a Parliament, will be easily conceived.

'If I have given Way, Sir, in these Observations, to any wanton Hyperbole, or exaggerated Assertions, they will, I hope, be pardon'd by those who shall reslect upon the real Absurdity of the Proposal which I am endeavouring to shew in its true State, and by all who shall consider that to return Thanks for the Management of the War, is to return Thanks for the Rot of Carthagena, for the Ruin of our Merchants, for the Loss of our Reputation, and for the Advancement of the House of Bourbon.

I hope no Man will be so unjust, or can be so ignerant, as to infinuate or believe, that I impute any Part of our Miscarriages to the Personal Conduct of his Majesty, or that I think his Majesty's Concern for the Prosperity of his People unworthy of the warmest and sincerest Gratitude. If the Address was confin'd to the Inspection of our Sovereign alone, I should be very far from censuring or ridiculing it; for his Majesty has not the Event of War in his Power, nor can confer upon his Ministers or Generals that Knowledge which they have neglected to acquire, or that Capacity which Nature has denied them. He may perform more than we have a Right to expect, and yet be unsuccessful; he may deserve the utmost Gratitude, even when, by the Misconduct of his Servants, the Nation is distress'd.

But, Sir, in drawing up an Address we should remember that we are declaring our Sentiments not only to his Majesty, but to all Europe, to our Allies, our Enemies, and our Posterity; that this Address will be understood, like all others; that Thanks offered in this Manner, by Custom, signify Approbation; and that therefore we must at present repress our Gratitude, because it can only bring into Contempt our Sovereign and ourselves.

Sir R. Walpole. To this Sir Robert Walpole reply'd:

Sir.

'I am very far from thinking that the War against Spain has been so unsuccessful as some Gentlemen have represented it; that the Losses which we have suffer'd have been more frequent than we had Reason to expect from the Situation of our Enemies, and the Course of our Trade; or our Deseats such as the common Chance of War does not often produce, even when the Inequality of the contending Powers is incon-An. 15. Geo. II. testable, and the ultimate Event as near to Certainty, as the Nature of human Affairs ever can admit.

' Nor am I convinc'd, Sir, even tho' it should be allowed that no Exaggeration has been made of our Miscarriages, that the Impropriety of an Address of Thanks to his Majesty for his Royal Care in the Management of the War, is gross and flagrant. For if it be allowed that his Majesty may be innocent of all the Misconduct that has produc'd our Defeats; that he may have form'd Schemes wifely, which were unskilfully profecuted; that even Valour and Knowledge concurring will not always obtain Success; and that therefore some Losses may be suffered, and some Defeats received, tho' not only his Majesty gave the wifest Directions, but his Officers executed them with the utmost Diligence and Fidelity; how will it appear from our ill Success, that our Sovereign does not deserve our Gratitude? And if it shall appear to us that our Thanks are merited, who shall restrain us from offering them in the most publick and solemn Manner?

'For my Part, I think no Confideration worthy of Regard in Competition with Truth and Julice; and therefore shall never forbear any Expression of Duty to my Sovereign, for fear of the Ridicule of our secret, or the Reproaches of our publick Enemies.

With regard to the Address under our Consideration, if it be allowed either that we have not been unsuccessful in any opprobrious Degree, or that ill Success does not necessarily imply any Defect in the Conduct of his Majesty, or debar us from the Right of acknowledging his Goodness and his Wisdom; I think, Sir, no Objection can be made to the Form of Expression now proposed, in which all sounding and pompous Language, all declamatory Exaggeration and studied Figures of Speech, all Appearance of Exultation and all the Farce of Rhetorick are carefully avoided, and nothing inserted that may disgust the most delicate, or raise Scruples in the most sincere.

Yet, Sir, that we may not waste our Time upon trivial Disputes, when the Nation expects Relief from our Counsels, that we may not suspend the Prosecution of the War by Complaints of past Deseats, or retard that Assistance and Advice which our Sovereign demands, by inquiring whether it may be more proper to thank or to counsel him, I am willing, for the Sake of Unanimity, that this Clause should be omitted, and hope that no other Part of the Ad-

Mr Pulteney.

Mr Pulteney stood up next.

Sir,

It is no Wonder that the Right Hon. Gentleman willingly consents to the Omission of this Clause, which could be inserted for no other Purpose, than that he might facrifice. it to the Resentment which it must naturally produce; and, by an Appearance of Modesty and Compliance pass easily thro' the first Day, and obviate any severe Inquiries that might be design'd.

"He is too well acquainted with the Opinion of many whom the Nation hath chosen to represent them, and with the universal Clamours of the People; too accurately informed of the State of our Enemies, and too conscious how much his secret Machinations have hinder'd our Success, to expect or hope that we should meet here to return Thanks for the Management of the War, of a War in which nothing has been attempted by his Direction that was likely to succeed, and in which no Advantage has been gained, but by acting without Orders and against his Hopes.

That I do not charge him, Sir, without Reason, or invent Accusations only to obstruct his Measures, or to gratify my own Resentment; that I do not eagerly catch flying Calumnies, prolong the Date of casual Reproaches, encourage the Malignity of the Envious, or adopt the Suspicions of the Melancholy; that I do not impose upon myself by warm Imagination, and endeavour to communicate to others Impressions which I have only received myself from Prejudice, will be proved from a Review of his Conduct since the Beginning of our Dispute with Spain, in which it will be found that he has been guilty not only of single Errors, but of deliberate Treachery; that he has always co-operated with our Enemies, and sacrificed to his private Interest the Happiness and the Honour of the British Nation.

'How long our Merchants were plundered, our Sailors enflaved, and our Colonies intimidated without Refentment; how long the Spaniards usurped the Dominion of the Seas, searched our Ships at Pleasure, confiscated the Cargoes without Controul, and tortur'd our Fellow-Subjects with Impunity, cannot but be remembred. Not only every Gentleman in this House, but every Man in the Nation, however indolent, ignorant, or obscure, can tell what Barbarities were exercised, what Ravages were committed, what Complaints were made, and how they were received. It is universally known that this Gentleman, and those whom he has gain'd by Pensions and Employments, treated the Lamentations of ruined Families, and the Outcries of tortur'd Bri-tons as the Clamours of Sedition, as defign'd to enflame Aa. 15. Geo. II. the People, and embarrass the Government.

It is known, Sir, that our Losses were at one Time ridiculed as below the Consideration of the Legislature; and the Distress of the most useful and honest Part of Mankind was made the Subject of Merriment and Laughter; the awkward Wit of all the Hirelings of the Town was exerted to divert the Attention of the Publick, and all their Art was employed to introduce other Subjects into Conversation.

But their Wit was not more successful on this than on other Occasions, their Imaginations were soon exhausted, and they found, as at other Times, that they must have recourse to new Expedients. The first Artifice of shallow Courtiers is to elude with Promises those Complaints which they cannot refute; a Practice that requires no Understanding or Knowledge, and therefore has been generally followed in his Administration. This Artifice they quickly made use of when they found that neither the Merchants, nor the Nation, were to be filenc'd by an Affectation of Negligence, or the Sallies of Mirth; that it was no longer fafe to jest upon the Miferies of their Countrymen, the Destruction of our Trade, and the Violation of our Rights; they condescended therefore to some Appearances of Compassion, and promised to exert all their Influence to procure Redress and Security.

That they might not appear, Sir, to have made this Promife only to free themselves from present Importunity, they set Negociations on Foot, dispatched Memorials, Remonstrances, Propositions and Computations; and with an Air of Gravity and Importance, assembled at proper Times to peruse the Intelligence which they received, and to concert new Instructions for their Agents.

While this Farce was acted, Sir, innumerable Artifices were made use of to reconcile the Nation to Suspense and Delay. Sometimes the Dillance of the Spanish Dominions in the West Indies retarded the Decision of our Claims, sometimes the dilatory Disposition of the Spaniards, and the established Methods of their Courts, made it impossible to procure a more speedy Determination. Sometimes Orders were dispatched to the West Indies in favour of our Trade, and sometimes those Orders were neglected by the Captains of the Spanish Ships, and the Governors of their Provinces; and when it was inquired why those Captains and Governors were not punished or recalled, we were treated with Contemps.

See the Debate on the Petitions, relating to the Spanish Depredations, in CHANDLER'S Fishery of the House of Commons, Anno 6, Geo. II. 1732, p. 274, &c.

An. 15. Geo. II. tempt, for not knowing what had been so lately told us of the dilatory Proceedings of the Spanish Courts.

'In the mean Time our Merchants were plundered, and our Sailors thrown into Dungeons, our Flag was infulted, and our Navigation restrained, by Men acting under the Commission of the King of Spain; we perceived no Effect of our Negociations but the Expence, and our Enemies not only institled on their former Claims, but prosecuted them with the utmost Rigour, Insolence and Cruelty.

'It must indeed, Sir, be urged in Favour of our Minister, that he did not refuse any Act of Submission, or omit any Method of Supplication by which he might hope to soften the Spaniard; he sollicited their Favour at their own Court, he sent Commissaries into their Country, he assisted them in taking Possession of Dominions, to which neither we nor they have proved a Right; and he employed the Natives of Britain to transport into Italy the Prince on whom the new erected Kingdom was to be conferred.

Well might he expect that the Spaniards would be softened by so much Kindness and Forbearance, and that Gratitude would at length induce them to spare those, whom no Injuries or Contempt had been able to alienate from them; and to allow those a free Course through the Seas of the West Indies, to whom they had been indebted for an uninterrupted Passage to the Possession of a Kingdom.

He might likewise urge, Sir, that when he was obliged to make War upon them, he was so tender of their Interest, that the British Admiral † was sent out with Orders rather to destroy his own Fleet than the Galleons, which, in Appearance, he was sent to take, and to perish by the Inclemency of the Climate, rather than enter the Spanish Ports, terrify their Colonies, or plunder their Towns.

But to little Purpose, Sir, did our Minister implore the Compassion of the Spanish Court, and represent the Services we had done for them; for his Compliance was by the Spaniards attributed not to Kindness but to Fear, and it was therefore determined to reduce him to absolute Slavery, by the same Practices which had already sunk him to so abject a State.

'They therefore treated our Remonstrances with Contempt, continued their Insolence and their Oppressions; and while our Agent was cringing at their Court with fresh Instructions in his Hand. while he was hurrying with busy Looks from one Grandee to another, and perhaps dismissed without an Audience one Day, and sent back in the midst of his Harangue on another, the Spanish Guard da Costa's continued their Havock, our Merchants were ruined, and An. 15. Geo. II. our Sailors tortured.

At length, Sir, the Nation was too much inflamed to be any longer amused with idle Negotiations, or trifling Expedients; the Streets echoed with the Clamours of the Populace, and this House was crowded with Petitions from the Merchants. The honourable Person with all his Art found himself unable any longer to elude a Determination of this Affair. Those whom he had hitherto persuaded that he had failed merely for want of Abilities, began now to suspect. that he had no Defire of better Success; and those who had hitherto chearfully merited their Pensions by an unshaken Adherence to all his Measures, who had extolled his Wisdom, and his Integrity, with all the Confidence of Security, began now to be shaken by the Universality of the Censure brought upon them. They were afraid any longer to affert what they neither believed themselves, nor could persuade others to admit. The most Indolent were alarmed, the most Obstinate convinced, and the most Prosligate ashamed.

What now could be done, Sir, to gain a few Months, to secure a short Interval of Quiet in which his Agents might be employed to disseminate some new Falshood, bribe to his Party some new Advocates, or full the People with the Opiate of another Expedient, with an Account of Concessions from the Court of Spain, or a Congress to compute the Losses, and adjust the Claims of our Merchants?

Something was necessarily to be attempted, and Orders were therefore dispatched by our Minister to his Agent at the Court of Spain, to procure some Stipulations that might have, at least, the Appearance of a Step towards putting an End to the Disputes between the two Nations. His Agent obey'd him with his usual Alacrity and Address, and in Time sent him, for the Satisfaction of the People of Great Britain, the celebrated Convention.

That Convention, Sir, has been so lately discussed, is so particularly remembered, and so universally condemned, that it would be an unjustifiable Waste of Time to expatiate upon it. There were but sew in the last Parliament, and I hope there are none in this, who did not see the Meanness of suffering incontentable Claims to be disputed by Commissaries, the Injustice of the Demand which was made on the South-Sea Company, and the contemptuous Inscience of amuling us with the Shadow of a Stipulation, which was to vanish into nothing, unless we purchased a Ratification of it, by paying what we did not owe.

" That

An. 15.Geo. II. 1741.

'That Convention therefore, Sir, was so far from pacifying, that it only exasperated the Nation, and took from our Minister the Power of acting any longer openly in Favour of the spaniards; of whom it must be confessed, that their Wisdom was over-power'd by their Pride; and that, for the Sake of showing all the Powers of Europe the Dependance in which they held the Court of Great Britain, they took from their Friends the Power of serving them any longer.

The Spaniards did not sufficiently distinguish between the Nation and the Ministry of Great Britain; nor suspected that their Interests, Inclinations, and Opinions were directly opposite, and that those who were carefied, seared, and reverenced by the Ministry, were by the People hated, despised, and ridiculed.

By enflaving our Ministry, they weakly imagined that they had conquer'd our Nation; nor, perhaps, Sir, would they quickly have discover'd their Mistake, had they used their Victory with greater Moderation, condescended to govern their new Province with less Vigour, and sent us Laws in any other Form than that of the Convention.

our Nation, was too flagrant to be palliated, and too publick not to be refented. The Cries of the Nation were redoubled, the Solicitations of the Merchants renewed, the Absurdity of our past Conduct exposed, the Meanness of our Forbearance reproach'd, and the Necessity of more vigorous Measures evidently proved.

The Friends of Spain discovered, Sir, at length, that War was necessarily to be proclaimed, and that it would be no longer their Interest to act in open Opposition to Justice and Reason, to the Policy of all Ages, and Remonstrances of the whole Nation.

'The Minister therefore, after long Delays, after having run round the Circle of all his Artifices, and endeavouring to intimidate the Nation by false Representations of the Power of our Enemies, and the Danger of an Invasion from them, at length suffered War to be proclaimed, tho' not 'till he had taken all Precautions that might disappoint us of Success.

'He knew that the State of the Spanish Dominions exposed them, in a particular Manner, to sudden Incursions by small Parties; and that in former Wars against them, our chief Advantages had been gained by the Boldness and Subtilty of private Adventurers, who by hovering over their Coasts in small Vessels, without raising the Alarms which the Sight of a Royal Navy necessarily produces, had discovered Opportunities of landing unexpectedly, and entering An. 15. Geo. II. their Towns by Surprize, of plundering their wealthy Ships, or enriching themselves by Ransoms and Compositions: He knew that inconsiderable Bodies of Men, incited by private Advantage, selected with Care for particular Expeditions, instructed by secret Intelligence, and conceal d by the Smallness of their Numbers, had found Means to march up into the Country thro' Ways which would never have been attempted by regular Forces, and have brought upon the Spaniards more Terror and Distress than could have been produced by a powerful Army, however carefully disciplined, or skilfully commanded.

· It was therefore, Sir, his first Care to secure his darling Spaniards from the pernicious Designs of private Adventurers; he knew not but some of Queen Elizabeth's Heroes might unfortunately revive, and terrify with an unexpected Invasion the remotest Corners of the Spanish Colonies, or appear before their Ports, and bid Defiance to their Navies and their Garrisons. When therefore a Bill * was brought into this House, by which Encouragement was given to the Subjects of this Kingdom to fit out Privateers, and by which those who should conquer any of the Colonies of the Spaniards, were confirmed in the Possession of them for ever, it cannot be forgotten with what Zeal he opposed, and with what Steadiness he rejected it, tho' it is not possible to asfign any Disadvantage which could have been produced by passing it, and the utmost that could be urged against it was, that it was unnecessary and useless.

Having thus discouraged that Method of War which was most to be dreaded by our Enemies, and less them little to sear but from National Forces and publick Preparations, his next Care was to secure them from any destructive Blow, by giving them Time to equip their Fleets, collect their Forces, repair their Fortifications, garrison their Towns, and regulate their Trade; for this Purpose he delay'd, as long as it was possible, the Dispatch of our Navies, embarrassed our Levies of Sailors by the Violence of Impresses; Violence which proper Encouragement and Regulations might have made unnecessary; and suffered the Privateers of the Enemy, to plunder our Merchants without Controus, under Pretence that Ships of War could not be stationed, nor Convoys provided for their Protection.

At length several Fleets were fitted out, Vernon was sent to the West Indies, and Haddock into the Mediterranean; Vol. XIII.

A Bill For the more effectual fecuring the Trade of his Maiefy's Subjects in im vice brought in by Mr Pulteney. See the Debate thereon in CHANDLER's History, Anno 11 Geo. 1738, p. 287.

15. Geo. II. the Consequences are so well known, that I should not men-1741. tion them at this Time, had I not been called upon to it by a Proposal of Thanks for the Conduct of the War.

- The Behaviour of the two Admirals was very different; tho' it has not yet appeared but that their Orders were the same. Vernon with six Ships destroy'd those Fortifications, before which Hosser's formerly perish'd in Obedience to the Commands of our Ministry. How this Success was received by the Minister and his Adherents, how much they were offended at the Exultations of the Populace, how evidently they appeared to consider it as a Breach of their pacifick Scheme, the whole Nation will testify.
- 'Nor is it to be forgotten, Sir, how invidiously the Minister himself endeavour'd to extenuate the Honour of that Action, by attempting in the Address which was on that Occasion presented to his Majesty, to suppress mentioning the Number of Ships with which that gallant Admiral atchiev'd it.
- In the mean Time, Sir, the Nation expected Accounts of the same Kind from the Mediterranean, where Haddock was stationed with a very considerable Force; but instead of Relations of Ports bombarded, and of Navies destroyed, we were daily informed of the Losses of our Merchants whose Ships were taken almost within Sight of his Squadrons.
- "We had indeed once the Satisfaction of hearing that the Spanish Fleet was confined in the Port of Cadiz, deffitute of Provisions; and it was even reported that they would either be destroy'd in that Harbour, or shut up, till the Want of Necessaries should oblige them to disband their Crews.
- We therefore, Sir, bore with Patience the daily Havock of our Trade in Expectation of the entire Destruction of the Royal Navy of Spain, which would have compell'd them to implore a Peace. But while we were flattering ourselves with those pleasing Dreams, we were wakened with an assonishing Account that the Spaniards had left Cadiz, and without any Interruption from the British Fleet, were taking in Provisions at Ferrol.
- Even this Disappointment did not deprive us of Hope, we know that the most politic are sometimes deceived, and the most vigilant may be surprized; we did not expect in our Commanders any Exemption from human Frailties, and required only that they should endeavour to correct their Mistakes; and therefore waited with Patience, in Expectation that what was neglected at Cadiz would be effected at Ferral.

But no fooner, Sir, had the Spaniards stored their An. 15. Geo. II. Fleet, than we were surprised with a Revolution of Affairs 1741. yet more wonderful. Haddock instead of remaining before Ferrol, was drawn off by some chimerical Alarm to protect Minorca, and the Spaniards in the mean Time sailed away to the West Indies in Conjunction with the French Squadron that had been for some Time ready for the Voyage.

If we consider the Absurdity of this Conduct, it cannot but be imagined that our Minister must send Haddock false Intelligence or treacherous Directions, on Purpose that the Spanish Fleet might escape without Interruption. For how can it be conceived that the Spaniards could have formed any real Defign of befieging Port Mahon? Was it probable that they would have fent an Army in defenceless Transports, into the Jaws of the British Fleet? and it was well known that they had no Ships of War to protect them. It was not confiftent even with common Policy to land an Army upon an Island, an Island wholly destitute of Provifions for their Support, while an hottile Navy was in Poffession of the Sea, and capable of supplying their Troops with Necessaries, and their Garrison with new Forces, while the Spanish Army would be itself thut up in a barren Island, without Provisions, without Recruits, without Hope of Succour, or Possibility of Success.

But such was the Solicitude of our Admiral for the Preservation of Minorca, that he abandoned his Station, and suffered the Spaniards to join their French Consederates, and prosecute their Voyage to the West-Indies unmolested.

In the West Indies they remained for some time Masters of the Sea, and confined Vernon to the Ports; but happily for us, Want of Provisions obliging the French to return, no Invasion of our Colonies was attempted which we had Reason to have apprehended.

'The Spaniards however gained by this Expedient Time to repair their Fortifications, strengthen their Garrisons, and dispose their Forces in the most advantageous Manner; and therefore, tho' they were not enabled to attack our Colonies, had at least an Opportunity of securing their own.

At length, Sir, lest all the World should be convinced that our Minister was in Confederacy with the Spaniards, it was determined, that their Territories in the West Indies should be invaded, but Care was taken to disappoint the Success of the Expedition by employing raw Troops, and unexperienc'd Officers. That by increasing the Number of Officers on the Establishment, he might render the War

13. Geo. II. more burthensome to the People, and encrease the Influence and multiply the Dependants in the Ministry.

But not content with favouring the Defigns of the Spaniards, by the Delay which the Levy of new Troops necessiaily produced, and encouraging them by the Probability of an easy Resistance against raw Forces; the Nation was not, in the Opinion of the Minister, punished sufficiently for its Rebellion against him, by being condemned to support a double Number of Troops. Some other Methods were to be used for protracting the War.

'The Troops, therefore, Sir, being by the Actident of a hard Winter more speedily raised than it was reasonable to expect, were detained in this Island for several Months, upon trivial Pretences; and were at length suffered to embark at a Time when it was well known that they would have much more formidable Enemies than the Spaniards to encounter; when the unhealthy Season of the West Indian Climate, must necessarily destroy them by Thousands.

These were the Hardships to which Part of our Fellow-Subjects have been exposed by the Tyranny of the Minister; Hardships which Caution could not obviate, nor Bravery surmount; they were sent to combat with Nature, and to make War against the Elements.

In the Passage the General * died, and the Command devolved upon a Man who had never seen an Enemy, and was therefore only a speculative Warriour; an Accident, which as it was not unlikely to happen, would have been provided against by any Minister who wished for Success. The melancholy Event of this Expedition, I need not mention, it was such as might be reasonably expected; when our Troops were sent out without Discipline, without Commanders, into a Country where even the Dews are fatal; against Enemies informed of their Approach, secured by Portifications, inured to the Climate, and well disciplin'd.

In the mean Time, Sir, it is not to be forgotten what Depredations were made upon our trading Vessels, with what Insolence Ships of very little Force approached our Coasts, and seized our Merchants in Sight of our Fortifications; it is not to be forgotten that the Conduct of some of those who owed their Revenues and Power to the Minister, gave yet stronger Proofs of a Combination.

Losses of our Merchants were ridiculed, with what contemptuous Triumph of Revenge they were charged with the Guilt of this fatal War, and how publickly they were condemned to suffer for their Folly.

For this Reason, Sir, they were either denied the Se-An. 15, Geo. II. curity of Convoys, or forsaken in the most dangerous Parts of the Sea, by those to whose Protection they were, in Appearance committed. For this Reason, they were either hindered from engaging in their Voyage by the Loss of those Men who were detained unactive in the Ships of War, or deprived of their Crews upon the high Seas, or suffered to proceed only to become a Prey to the Spaniards.

But it was not, Sir, a sufficient Gratification of our implacable Minister, that the Merchants were distressed for alarming the Nation, it was thought likewise necessary to punish the People for believing too easily the Reports of the Merchants, and to warn them for ever against daring to imagine themselves able to discern their own Interest, or to prescribe other Measures to the Ministers, than they should be themselves inclin'd to pursue; our Minister was resolv'd to show them, by a Master-stroke, that it was in his Power to disappoint their Desires by seeming to comply, and to destroy their Commerce and their Happiness by the very Means, by which they hoped to secure them.

For this Purpose, Sir, did this great Man summon all his Politicks together, and call to Council all his Confidents and all his Dependents, and it was at length determined by their united Wisdom, to put more Ships into Commission, to aggravate the Terrors of the Impress by new Severity, to draw the Sailors by the Promise of large Rewards from the Service of the Merchants, to collect a mighty Fleet, and to dispatch it on a secret Expe-

A fecret Expedition, Sir, is a new Term of Ministerial Art, a Term which may have been, perhaps, formerly made Use of by Soldiers for a Design to be executed without giving the Enemy an Opportunity of providing for their Desence, but is now used for a Design with which the Enemy is better acquainted, than those to whom the Execution of it is committed. A secret Expedition is now an Expedition of which every one knows the Design, but those at whose Expence it is undertaken. It is a Kind of naval Review, which excels those of the Park in Magnisicence and Expence, but is equally useless and ridiculous.

'Upon these secret Expeditions, however, were fixed for a long Time the Expectations of the People; they saw all the Appearances of Preparation for a real War, they were informed that the Workmen in the Docks were retained by uncommon Wages to do double Duty; they saw the most specious Encouragements offered to the Sailors; they saw Naval Stores accumulated with the utmost Industry; heard to the House, that the Navigation and Commerce of these An. 15. Geo. II. Kingdoms have been continually exposed to the growing Infolence of the Spanish Privateers, from the Commencement of this just and necessary War; that during its whole Progress and Continuance, notwithstanding the repeated Applications of the fuffering Merchants for Protection and Redress, their Losses and Misfortunes have considerably increased of late, to the impoverishing of many of his Majesty's Subjects, the great Detriment of Trade in general, the Diminution of his Majesty's Revenue, and the Dishonour of the Nation; that upwards of Three Hundred Ships and Veffels have been already taken, (the greatest Part of them in or near the British Channel and Soundings) and carried into St Sebastian, and other adjacent Ports; by which Numbers of his Majesty's most useful Subjects have been reduced to Want and Imprisonment, or compelled by inhuman Treatment, and despairing of a Cartel for the Exchange of Prisoners, have enlisted in the Service of Spain; that the Petitioners apprehend, that most of these Missortunes might have been prevented, confidering the Weakness of our Enemy at Sea, had a few of his Majesty's Ships of War been properly stationed, and the Commanders kept strictly to their Duty; a Neglect, which appears the more furprising, as there was a Precedent of an Act of Parliament in 1707, expresly made for those Purposes, intituled, An All for the better securing the Trade of this Kingdom, by Cruizers and Convoys; that by Means of this Neglect, and the many valuable Prizes the Spaniards have made, they have been encouraged and enabled to fit out fuch Numbers of Privateers from St Sebastian and Bilboa, exclusive of other Ports, as to render the Navigation to and from these Kingdoms every Day more and more dangerous; and that the present great and unexpected Power of the Enemy in the Mediterranean, gives the Petitioners Reason to apprehend. that their Trade is become extremely precarious in those Parts; that there have been various Neglects and Delays in the Appointment and fending out of Convoys; and that out of those few which have been granted, some of the Commanders have paid so little Regard to the Ships under their Care, that they have deserted them at Sea, and left them as a Prey to the Enemy; and praying Leave further to represent, that the Navigation to and from several of his Majesty's Colonies has often been much exposed to the Enemy; and that many Ships have been taken in the American Scas by their Privateers, principally owing, as the Petitioners presume, to a Want of a sufficient Number of Ships, or a proper Care in some of his Majesty's Commanders, stationed in 1741.

Then a Motion being made by Mr Pulcency, that the feveral Papers presented to the House on Monday and Yesterday by Mr Comptroller, be referred to a select Committee. and that they do examine the same, and report to the House what they find material therein: It occasioned a great Debate. Mr Pulteney introduc'd his Motion with the following Speech:

Mr Speaker,

Mr Pulteney's Motion for re-Committee the Several Papers laid before them relating to the War.

I have always thought, that when Papers of State are called for by this House, as well as when such Papers are ferring to a felect laid before us without being called for, it should be with fome Sort of View or Defign. We know very well, that when Treaties, Estimates or Accounts are laid before us without being called for, it is generally with a Defign to Conduct of the demand a Sum of Money, or Vote of Credit; and fuch Demands have of late Years been usually complied with, I believe, by most Members of this House, without so much as looking at any one of the Papers or Estimates, which were laid before us as the Foundation of that Demand. This Practice, Sir, must be allowed to be a little extraordinary; but our late Praclice, with regard to those Papers that are expressly called for, has been much more surprising; for after the Papers called for have been laid before us, they have been ordered to lie upon the Table, and there they have generally lain, without the least Examination, as if we had had no View in calling for them, but that of increasing the Bulk of our Votes by long Lists of Letters, Instructions and Memorials. Experience has shewn, that when such Papers are ordered to lie upon the Table for the Perusal of the Members, they are feldom perused with Attention by any, and when they are perused seperately and distinctly by a few particular Members, none of them have Authority enough to prevail with the House to enter into a frick Inquiry, or to take into Confideration the Errors, Mistakes or Blunders, they may from such Papers have discovered.

' For this Reason, Sir, and that the Nation may see we do not put the Administration to the Trouble and Expence of laying Piles of State Papers before us, without any View or Delign, either for the Service or Satisfaction of the Publick, I think, when we call for any Papers of Importance, and they are accordingly laid before us, they ought of courle to be referred to a felect Committee, that they may examine them strictly, and report their Remarks, Observa- An. 15 Geo. II, tions, or Objections, to the House; for the Examination of 1741.

Their Report will have more Weight, than the Examination or Report of any single Member, who peruses the Papers upon our Table, without any Direction or Authority from the House.

When I argue in this Manner, Sir, I hope no Gentleman will think, that I am arguing against this or any other Administration; for a wife and just Administration will always be glad to have its Conduct inquired into in the most strict, regular, and authentick Method; and if the Administration be weak or wicked, it is then the Duty of Parliament to take that Method, which is the most regular. and the most proper for rescuing the Nation out of the Hands of such an Administration; therefore every Gendeman must, with me, suppose one of these two Things: Either, that the Doctrine I have advanced will be approved by those who have the Honour of being our present Minithers, or that their opposing it ought to be a prevailing Argument with every independent Member of this House for agreeing to it; and consequently, I must look upon it as an established Maxim, that all the Papers which are laid before this House, and deemed to be of great Importance, ought to be referred to the Confideration of a felect Committee.

This, Sir, is a Maxim which will hold good at all Times, and in all Circumstances; but when the Nation finds itself involved in great Difficulties, when our Affairs both abroad and at home are apparently in great Diffress, and when a general Suspicion prevails against the Conduct of our Administration; this Maxim ought not only to be approved, but in every Instance, without Hesitation, purfued; and that this is our Cafe at present, I shall endeayour to demonstrate. With regard to our Trade and Mapulictures, they have been upon the Decay for several Years: Every Man is now fenfible of this Decay, and every Man is now convinced, that it is owing to the Taxes we have upon the Necessaries and Conveniencies of Life. By these Taxes the Subsistence of poor Labourers and Manulacturers is sendered more expensive in this than in any foreign Country, which of course renders it impossible for them to work so cheap, and this must necessarily make our Manufactures come dearer to foreign Markets than the Manufactures of any other Country. This has gradually diminished the Quantity of our Exports to all Parts of the World, except to our own Plantations, and mult, at last,

An. 15. Geo. II. put an entire Stop to our exporting any one Sort of Manufacture; for other Nations will by Degrees fall into the Method of rivalling us in every Sort, and as fast as they do, our Export of that Sort of Manufacture must cease.

> We may talk, Sir, against the Exportation of our Wool, and buly ourselves in forming Schemes for preventing it; but unless we can, by abolishing many of our Taxes, enable our Poor to work as cheap as the Poor in other Countries do, it will be impossible for us to prevent it, any other Way than by diminishing our Produce; for if we can work up none of our Wool, but barely what is necessary for home Confumption; and if a greater Quantity be produced than what is necessary for this Demand, the Surplus must be exported. or it must rot upon the Hands of the Owners, which would render it impossible for many of our Farmers to pay their Rents; and this might, in a little Time, make the Cry as loud for the Exportation of our Wool, as it is now against it.

' The bad Effects of our Taxes, and the great Decrease in the Export of our Manufactures, were most fensibly felt, Sir, before the breaking out of our present War with . Spain; but they then began to be more sensibly felt than ever, because that War put an entire Stop to our Exportation of any Manufactures to Spain, and made it more dangerous to export them any where elfe, which of courfe inhanced the Price, and, confequently, diminished the Sale at every other foreign Market. This at once threw Numbers of our poor Labourers and Manufacturers out of their usual Way of subfishing, and brought them and their Families upon their respective Parishes, which has, in many Parishes, raised the Poors Rates to a Height never known before in this, nor, I believe, in any other Kingdom.

' This, Sir, is the present desperate State of our Trade. and God only knows when, or if ever we shall recover : but this is far from being the only dire Effect of the long Continuance of our many heavy Taxes. Our People bore with Patience the Loads they groan under, as long as they had any Hopes of feeing our Debts paid off, and our Taxes abolished; but they have now lost all Hopes, and this creates a general Uneafiness, which, if not speedily removed. must end in the Subversion of our Liberties, and, perhaps, the Overthrow of our present happy Ettablishment. If this unhappy State had been the necessary Consequence of a long and unavoidable War: If by the extraordinary Expence we have put ourselves to for twenty Years past, the Balance of Power in Europe had been settled upon a solid Foundation: If we had established such a Confidence among our Allies, and such a Respect at all the Courts of Europe, as to prevent any one of them from daring to infult or injure us, the An. 15. Geo. II, People would have had some Consolation, and would still have had Reason to hope, that, at last, we might have been able to have paid off our Debts, and abolished most of our Taxes. But can this be said to be the Case? We have been engaged in no War: We have had no Occasion to put ourselves to any extraordinary Expence; for I will venture to say, that if we had not for these twenty Years past sent one Minister or Courier abroad, nor kept one marching Regiment on foot at home, the Balance of Power would have been more secure than it is at present, and we should have been more secure than it is at present, and we should have been more consided in by our Friends, and more dreaded by our Enemies, than we are at this Time, or have been at any Time within that Period.

' It is something surprising, Sir, but it is what the whole Nation is now convinced of, that every extraordinary Article of Expence we have put ourselves to for twenty Years past, every Negotiation we have entered into, and every Treaty we have concluded, has contributed to embroil more and more our Affairs, both at home and abroad, and to render the Balance of Power in Europe more precarious than it was before. By this Conduct, Sir, we at last found ourselves involved in an open War with Spain, and threatned and dictated to by France, without one Ally to affift us, and without one Fund for carrying on the War, except an additional true Shillings upon Land; for we can no more call the Sinking Fund a Fund for carrying on a War, than we can call the Funds appropriated to the Payment of the Interest growing due to our publick Creditors a Fund for that Purpose; because the Sinking Fund was so solemnly, as legally, and as authentically appropriated to the Payment of their Principal, as ever the other was to the Payment of their Interest.

In these Circumstances we were, Sir, nay, I may fay, in worse, when the late Emperor died; for France, by sending her Squadrons to the West-Indies, and the Manifesto she published upon that Occasion, had in some Measure openly declared against us; and considering what little Success we have had against Spain alone, what Success could we have expected against France and Spain united together against us i From this immediate Danger we were fet free by the Accident of the Emperor's Death; for France then forefaw the might have a better Game to play, and was therefore willing to keep fair with this Nation for a Time; but how were we let free, Sir, from this immediate Danger? Sir, by the Balance of Power's being brought into the most imminent, and in all human Probability, the most unavoidable Danger; for, in my Opinion, nothing less than a Miracle Vol. XIII. has An. 15, Geo. II. has hitherto prevented the utter Ruin of the House of Aufria, considering the many Powers which France has found Means to unite against it, and the little Assistance it has received from those who were both in Honour and Interest obliged to support it. This, Sir, I say, has for a Time prevented our having France avowedly united with Spain in the present War against us. If the Emperor had lived, we should probably, before now, have been obliged to submit to fuch Terms of Peace with Spain, as France pleafed to prescribe, or we should have been now standing single, and alone, against the joint Force of the two powerful Monarchies of France and Spain; for confidering how we had deferted the Emperor in the Year 1733, he would probably have rejoiced at our Distress; considering how we have treated the King of Prussia for several Years past, he would certainly have refused to give us any Assistance; and the Dutch durst not have ventured to have joined us, without a powerful Confederacy in Germany. By good Conduct, and the Assistance of Providence, we might, perhaps, by ourfelves, have been able to have supported such a War, especially if we had by our former Occonomy paid off our Debts, and freed our publick Revenue from Mortgage. We might have carried it on with Glory, and ended it with Honour; but considering what a powerful Navy France might have fitted out, if she had no Way been obliged to divert her Strength by a Land War, and confidering how we should have been obliged to divide our Naval Force, for the Protection of our Trade in every Part of the World, and for the Defence of our Dominions in the Mediterranean, and in America, as well as at home, it must be allowed, that such a War, supposing the best Conduct on our Side, would have been extremely heavy and dangerous; and if it had been > should certainly, before this Time, have been undone. ' From hence we may fee, Sir, that tho' the Emperor's Death, at the Time it happened, was unlucky for Europe. and may, at last, prove unlucky for this Nation, yet it sufpended, or put off for a Time, the imminent Danger we were then exposed to; but are we now free from this Danger? Does not every Man of common Penetration foresee. that if France be allowed to fettle the Affairs of Germany to her own Likeing, this Danger will recur upon us with redoubled Force? She may then dictate to most of the other States of Europe: She may compel those that formerly would have remained neuter, to join with Spain and her against us; and thus, unless we submit to whatever France shall pléase > left to the Management of those, who have hitherto managed with so little Success our War against Spain alone, we

please to prescribe, we shall have not only France, but most An. 15. Geo. II. of the States of Europe, united with Spain in a War against us. Such a War it would be impossible for us to support. We should then have no Alternative: We must submit; and in such a Case, who can tell what Sort of Submission France might require?

This, Sir, is a most disagreeable, a most melancholy Prospect, and it becomes the more so when we consider, that in the present distressed Condition of this Nation, and confuled State of Europe, it is hardly possible to prevent the Danger, or to disperse the Cloud that hangs over us; for unless we can break that Confederacy which France has, by our Blunders, found Means to form against the Queen of Hungary, I am afraid, it will be impossible for us to form any counter Confederacy; and confidering the prefent Load of Debt we groan under, and the general Uneafiness thereby occasioned, it will be impossible for us to afford such a powerful Affistance to the Queen of Hungary, as may enable her to make Head against such a mighty Confederacy. Thus, Sir, I hope, I have demonstrated, that at present we labour under great Difficulties, and that our Affairs are in the utmost Distress both abroad and at home. This of itself is sufficient for raising a general Suspicion against the Conduct of our Ministers. From the many expensive Negotiations we have of late Years carried on: From the many expensive and unprofitable Treaties we have concluded: From the vast Expence we have put ourselves to, for giving Weight to those Negotiations, or for enforcing the Observance of those Treaties, the People of this Nation expected. that the Liberties of Europe would have been by this Time secured, beyond a Possibility of being attacked, and the Trade and Navigation of this Kingdom fecured beyond a Possibility of being interrupted; and, consequently, that from this Time we might have disbanded our Armies, laid up our Squadrons, dismissed our foreign Auxiliaries, and applied ourselves fincerely and effectually to the paying off our Debts, and abolithing our Taxes. This, I fay, the People expected: This they had Reason to expect; and now, when they find themselves disappointed in every one of these Particulars, they cannot but suspect, they do most generally, and most violently suspect, both the Wisdom and lategrity of those who, for so many Years, have had the Direction of our publick Affairs, and who have never been refused any Sum they thought necessary for securing the Success of their Measures.

. The Difficulties we labour under, the Diffreffes we are drove to, and the Danger to which the Liberties of Europe,

Hast or oh . . . dal pds union, eralliant

An. 15:Geo. II, and, confequently, the Liberties of this Nation, now fieer 1/41 poled, may be owing to Caules of a different Nature. They may be owing. Sir, to the Folly or Ambition of foreign Courts, or to Events that could not be forefeen or provided against: It may appear, that our Ministers have done all that human Wildom could direct, for preventing thefe faist Bfects; but the present Face of Affairs, both at home and abroad, affords such a strong Presumption against them, that it is become the Duty of Parliament to make an Inquiry into their Conduct. If they are conscious of no Neglect, Weakness, or Crime, they will promote that Inquiry, they will affilt us in every Step that is necessary for making that Inquiry satisfactory to the Nation. If they behave otherwise, it will add Strength to the Prefumption against them, and confequently, ought to make us more zealous in performing our Duty to our Country."

'Thus, Sir, if at all Times, it ought to be look'd on as a Maxim, that all fuch Papers of Moment as are laid before this House, ought to be referred to a Select Committee, this Maxim ought, in our present Circumstances, to be most religiously observed, and therefore, I shall conclude with moving, 'That the several Papers presented to this House on Monday last, and, likewise, the several Papers presented to the House Yesterday, by Mr. Comptroller, be referred to a Select Committee; and that they do examine the same, and report to the House, what they find material in them.' This Motion being seconded, Mr. Henry Pelham stood

Mr H. Pelham.

This Motion being seconded, Mr. Henry Pelbam stood up, and speke as follows:

Mr. Speaker,

'If a Parliamentary Inquiry into our past Conduct could be carried on without any Interruption or Prejudice to our future, no Man should be more ready than I to agree to it: No Man should be more zealous in promoting it; because I am convinced, it would terminate in a full Justification of those lately concerned in our Administration, against-all the Aspersions and Calumnies that have been cast upon their Conduct. But a Parliamentary Inquiry into the Conduct of Ministers always has been, and always must be attended with great Warmth; for the most innocent Minister will always have a Party in Parliament zealous to condemn, and the most guilty will generally have a Party zealous to acquit. This of course raises a Warmth within Doors, and this Warmth within Doors will always occasion Heats and Animosities without, which may rife to fuch a Height as to break out in a Civil War. Of this we had fuch a late Inflance, 'that it can escape the Notice of no Gentleman in this House. believe, few Gentlemen will now pretend to justify the Conduct duct of those, who were our Ministers during the last sour An. 15. Geo. II.

Years of Queen Anne; I believe, most Gentlemen are now convinced, they were guilty of very high Crimes and Misdemeanors; and yet, we all know, a Parliamentary Inquiry into their Conduct, was the Occasion of a Civil War in the Kingdom, which might have been fatal to us, if we had at that Time been engaged in a foreign War, or if Europe had been in such a Situtation as it is in at present.

I had then, Sir, the Honour to be a Member of this House, and I was zealous for the Inquiry then set on Foot, because I thought the Ministers guilty, and because I thought we had then an Opportunity to inquire into their Conduct, without exposing the Nation to any foreign Danger. But for as much as I was convinced of the Misconduct of those Ministers, if the Nation had been at that Time involved in a dangerous foreign War, or if the Liberties of Europe had been as much in Danger as they are at present, I should have been for suspending our Resentment against the Guilty, till we had fully provided for the Sasety of the Innocent; and the Event shewed, that this Sort of Conduct would have been the most prudent.

This ought always, in my Opinion, to be a Rule for our Conduct, even when we are convinced that Ministers are criminal, or have been guilty of some Piece of Misconduct : How much more ought it to be a Rule for our Conduct, when we are convinced of their Innocence, or have but a bare Suspicion of their Guilt. When a Parliamentary Inquiry is fet up, Innocence may be a Safeguard, but it is far from being a Safeguard in which a Minister can securely and quietly put his Trust. He must not sit with his Arms across, and trust to the Henesty of his Prosecutors and Impartiality of his Judges. He must be watchful that no false Evidence shall be brought or given against him, and diligent and expeditious in detecting and exposing it when it in He must take Care to make his Innocence appear in every Instance where it is attacked, and for this Purpose he may very probably be obliged to discover Secrets which may be of great Prejudice to the Nation. At the same Time, he must in every Step be watchful, lest any Point should be carried against him by a factious Cabal, and for this Purpose he must diligently and earnestly follicit the Attendance of all his Friends. These Considerations, Sir, must thew, that during such an Inquiry, no Administration can have Leisure to mind the publick Business as they ought; and besides, the Necessity Ministers are in such Cases reduced to, of divulging the Secrets of Government, in order to justify their Conduct, may be of infinite and irreparable Prejudice to the Publick :

Aid 16. Geo. 11. Publick; therefore, I think, we ought to lay it down as a Rule for our Conduct, never to consent to a Parliamentary Inquiry into the Conduct of an Administration, unless we be convinced, that some of those concerned have been guilty of very great Crimes or Misdemeanors.'

A common Rumour, or a bare Suspicion, however general, can be no sufficient Ground for setting up such an Inquiry; because such Rumours and Suspicions are spread against the best, as well as against the worst Ministers. Nay, a good Minister is more liable than a bad one to such Rumours and Suspicions. If he be frugal of the publick Treafure, and cautious in granting publick Favours: If he prefers meritorious Modesty to clamorous Impudence, he must raise to himself a great Number of Enemies; for every Man who is refused any Suit, however justly, becomes a secret or declared Enemy to the Minister, and of course endeavours to propagate Calumnies against him; and the Misfortune is, that the most Impudent and Clamorous are generally most listned to by the unthinking Part of Mankind. Tho' this be by far the most numerous Part of Mankind, yet, I hope, there are none of them in this House, and therefore, whatever Rumours or Suspicions may be spread without Doors, I hope, they will not be listned to here, unless they appear to be founded upon indisputable Facts, or very strong Presumptions.'

As to Facts, Sir, notwithstanding the many Rumours that are spread without Doors, I have never yet heard a Proof offered of any one criminal Fact against those concerned in our Administration; and as to the Presumptions that have been suggested, I do not think there is the least Foundation for any one of them. That this Nation labours under great Difficulties, and that the present Posture of Affairs, both at Home or Abroad, is far from being agreeable, I shall readily grant; but to every one who, with Candour, examines the History of this Nation, and of Europe, for Twenty Years past, it must appear evident, that neither of these Misfortunes can justly be imputed to any Design or Misconduct in our Ministers. Our Debts were all contracted long before the present Administration had a Being. At least, if any new Debt has been contracted, a much greater old one has been paid off; for when our present Ministers first came into Power, the National Debt was larger than it is at present, and what was worse, our publick Credit, by an ill managed Project, was elmost entirely funk. They, by their Wildom and good Management, foon restored the publick Credit of the Nation, and they have fince paid off as much of the publick Debt as it was possible, without Ad. 15 Geo. II. loading the People with some new or additional Taxes.

If we had kept up no Army; if we had kept up no Navy; if we had been put to no Expence by the ambitious Projects of foreign Princes, I shall admit, Sir, that a much larger Share of our publick Debt might have been paid off, and, perhaps, many of our heavy Taxes abolished. But will any one say, that at any Time for this Twenty Years past, it would have been prudent or safe to disband our Army? Will any one fay, that we ought to have left our Navy to rot and fall to decay? Will any one fay, now that we so sensibly feel a Want of Seamen, that we ought not always to keep a large Number of Seamen in Pay? Will any one fay, that when we were threaten'd with an Attack, we ought not to have provided for our Defence? By fo doing. Sir, we have always prevented the Attack, and thereby preserved our domestick Tranquility for these Twenty Years past; and furely it will be allowed, that it is both fafer and cheaper to prevent than to repel an Invation.

Therefore, Sir, if a greater Share of our publick Debt has not been paid off; if none of our heavy Taxes have . been abolished, it is not owing to any Mismanagement in our Ministers, but to the publick Necessities, which annually required a larger Expence than had been foreseen. If our Ministers had taken upon them to be sole Judges of those Necessities, there might have been some Pretence for finding Fault with their Conduct; but they have regularly laid these Necessities before the Parliament, and have never put the Nation to one Shilling Expence, but what has been previously authorised, or afterwards approved of by a Majority in both Houses; therefore an Inquiry into their Conduct upon this Head, may properly be called an Inquiry into the Conduct of Parliament, and if you should give Sentence against the former, it will be a Condemnation of the latter, which, with Regard to the Respect due to Parliament, may have a very bad Effect upon all Degrees of Men in this Kingdom.

Now, Sir, with regard to the present Posture of Affairs at Home and Abroad, I shall grant, it is a Misfortune to this Nation to be involved in a War with Spain: I shall grant it is a Misfortune to Europe, to have so many of its Princes united for destroying that Balance of Power upon which their own Independency, at least the Independency of all of them but one, most absolutely depends. But can either of these Misfortunes be imputed to any Misconduct in our Ministers? Our being involved in a War with Spain, is owing to nothing but the Pride, Haughtiness, and Obstinacy of that Nation. Did our Ministers advise his Majesty to declare War against Spain without a Cause? Did they precipitate the Nation into that War, without having first tried every Method for obtaining Satisfaction by peaceable Means? We all know that their Backwardness in commencing Hostilities was exclaimed against by many in this Nation, and even by those who now endeavour to load them with the Misfortune of our being involv'd in War. Thus, Sir, if Ministers purfue pacifick Measures, their Conduct is found Fault with, and if they pursue warlike Measures their Conduct is found Fault with; if they provide for our Defence at Home, and thereby prevent an Attack, their Conduct is found Fault with, on Account of the Expence; and if, by their neglecting to provide for our Defence, the Nation should be invaded, their Conduct would certainly, and, I am fure, with more Reason, be found Fault with. This, Sir, makes me think, it is not so much their Condoct, as their continuing to be our Ministers, that is the real Ground of Complaint; and this will be a Ground of Complaint against all future, as well as against our present Ministers; for no Man that serves the Crown will give up his Imployment, as long as the King inclines he should keep it, and defires nothing of him, inconsistent with his Honour, or the Good of his Country, which, it is well known, his present Majesty will never desire of any Man that ferves him; and this, perhaps, makes Gentlemen for fond of getting into Imployment, but it is, in my Opinion. an ungrateful Return in Gentlemen, to endeavour to diffress his Majetly's Affairs, in order to force themselves into his Service.

Ah. 15. Geo. H. 1741.

. Thus, Sir, I think, it must appear, that no one who has the Honour of having a Share in his Majesty's Councils, can be blamed for the Misfortune of our being involved in a War with Spain, and as little can they be blamed for the prefent unhappy State of Affairs in Europe, which is entirely owing to one of these two Causes: Either to a fatal, I may fay frantick Ambition in some of the Princes of Germany. who, rather than not extend their Dominions, feem resolved to render themselves dependent upon the Crown of France: or it is owing to an unaccountable Obstinacy in the Court of Vienna, who, rather than do Justice to their neighbouring Princes in Germany, feem refolved to bring themselves, and the whole German Empire, into a Sort of Subjection to his Most Christian Majesty. Which of these two Causes the present Missortune of Europe is owing to, I shall not pretend to determine; but let it be which it will, our Ministers cannot be blamed. It was not, it cannot be supposed to have been in their Power to govern the Ambition of the Princes of Germany, or to overcome the Obstinacy of the Court of Vienna.

'I hope, I have now shewn, Sir, that neither the Dif. An. 15. Geo. 11. ficulties we labour under, nor the present dangerous Situation of Affairs, can afford any Prefumption of Milconduct in those, who for some Time past, have had the Honour of being in his Mujetty's Councils; and as no particular Crime has yet been charged against them, nor the least Proof offered of any Fact, if there are any Suspicions without Doors, thole Suspicions can have no folid Foundation, and ought not therefore to have such Weight within Doors, as to lead us into a Parliamentary Inquiry, which is always troublesome, and, at this Juncture, would be extremely dangerous. If this Nation be in Distress, if the Affairs of Europe be in Distress, as they certainly are, it should be an Argument with us to avoid all personal Altercations and Animosities, and to unito heartily among ourselves, both in Council and Action, for retrieving Affairs both abroad and at home. The Case of this Nation, the Case of Europe, is not yet, thank God! fo desperate, but that both may be restored, if proper Remedies be speedily applied. Our publick Credit is yet in a flourishing Condition: We may yet raise large Sums for the Support of a necessary War; and if the Tranquility of Europe be restored, and established upon a solid Foundation. we may foon pay off old Arrears, as well as what we may be obliged to contract for that falutary Purpose. The Confederacy formed against the Queen of Hungary is so unnatural, that it must of itself be dissolved, unless the Princes of Germany be kept firm to France, by feeing it impossible or dangerous to break from her. This may be prevented, if we immediately unite amongst ourselves, and interpose with the whole Strength of the British Nation; but if, like ignorant and contentious Physicians, we sit accusing one another of Malpractice, the Patient may expire in the Interim.'

I must, therefore, conjure Gentlemen to give over all personal Animosties, and think of nothing but giving his Majesty that Advice, and those Aids, which may be thought proper and necessary for providing against the Calamity that threatens us. If any Thing has been done amis, we may soon find a proper Time for inquiring into it, but the present is far from being so; and if no immediate Inquiry be designed, we have no Occasion for referring any Papers to the Consideration of a Select Committee; for I cannot agree with my honourable Friend in thinking, that every important Paper, or Parcel of Papers, that are, or may be laid before the House, should be referred to a Select Committee. If this were laid down as a Rule for our Condect, we should have Time to do nothing, but to hear and consider the Reports from such Committees. It would therefore be impossible to ob-

Vot. XIII M

An. 15. Geo. 11, serve the Rule, and it has never been the Practice. When Gentlemens Curiofity prompts them to defire a Sight of any Papers of State, they move for having them laid before the House, and their Motion is always complied with, when confishent with the publicle Safety. When the Papers thus called for are laid upon the Table, they examine them: If they find nothing material, their whole Defign is answered; but if they find any Thing they think worth the Notice of the House, they acquaint the House with what they have observed, and if a Majority be of the same Opinion, the House either enters into the immediate Consideration thereof, which they may eafily do, because the Papers are upon the Table; or refer the Whole to the Confideration of a Committee, perhaps a Select Committee.'

This, Sir, is the usual Method of proceeding in such Cales, and as no Observations have been made upon any of the Papers referred to in this Motion, nor any one Fact mentioned from them for inducing us to take any of them into our Consideration, I must suppose, that these Gentlemen who have perused them, for I confess I have not, have found nothing in them, they think worth the Notice of the House; and if they have not, I can see no Reason why we should give any Committee the Trouble to perule and examine

But, belides feeing no Reason for referring these Papers to a Select Committee, there are, I think, flrong Reafons against it. If this Motion should be complied with, it will immediately spread an Opinion abroad, that inflead of taking proper Measures for the Time to come, we are going to enter upon an Inquiry into palt Measures; this will certainly raife Divisions amongst us, and may produce a Civil War in the Kingdom, or, at least a Breach between his Majesty and his Parliament, which will of course disable us from giving our Friends abroad any Affifiance, or interpoling any Manner of Way in the Affairs of Europe; and the Confequence of fuch an Opinion's being spread abroad, may be most fatal. The Princes now united in an Alliance with France, will then fee it impossible to break off from that Alliance: The other Princes and States of Europe will fee it impossible to form any Confederacy, capable of giving a Check to the Defigns of France: The Queen of Hungary, despairing of any Relief or Affistance, will immediately submit to such Terms as France shall please to prescribe; and the Court of France, being free from the Fear of Controll, will fet no Bounds to their Ambition. Suppose their present chief Minister should be moderate in his Views; suppose he has no other Intention than to reduce the Power of the House of Austria, without adding to the Power of the House of Bourban, yet in An. 15. Geo. II. such a Case, it would be impossible for him to stem the Torrent of French Ambition, or to govern a Court where that Passion has always so much prevailed.'

The spreading such an Opinion abroad is, therefore, Sir, what we ought most carefully to prevent; but if this Motion (hould be agreed to, it would be impossible to prevent a most strict Inquiry, and a most violent Prosecution's being fet on Foot. There are many Gentlemen, I hope, both within Doors and without, of a moderate Disposition, and fuch as have a greater Regard for the Salety of the Publick, than for any personal Resentment. Those Gentlemen may, as yet, be able to govern and moderate the Temper of the Nation, or, at least of this House; but if a Select Committee were once named, I am afraid, it would be out of their Power. That Committee would think it incumbent upon them to do something: The Papers now proposed to be referred to them would give them an Inclination to fee others, and those again would make them think it necessary to fee more, till they had got all the State Papers, even the most secret before them; and in order to succeed in all their Motions for this Purpose, and to have their Report approved of, they would endeavour to raife, and would probably fucceed in raising a most violent and revengeful Spirit, both without Doors and within, which might fall heavy upon fome innocent Men, as well as upon the Guilty. The former, his Majelty would certainly, from his known Justice and Refolution, endeavour to protect, and what might be the Confequence of fuch a Contest God only knows.'

Thus, Sir, as I can see no Reason for this Motion: As, I think, it would be attended with the most dangerous, the most statal Consequences, I must therefore be against it, and hope the honourable Gentlemen will not insist upon their Motion; for even their insisting upon it may have a very bad Effect upon his Majetty's Negotiations abroad.

The Hon. Alexander Hume Campbell spoke next. Sir.

The honourable Gentleman who spoke last, has made me consider the Motion now before you with great Attention, and that the House may do the same, I desire, it may be again read by the Clerk at your Table.

The Motion being read, be avent on thus.

I cannot conceive, Sir, how the honourable Gentleman could from this Motion take Occasion to talk of Inquiries or personal Piques and Resentments. Is there any Word, is there any Expression in the Motion, that seems to infinuate, as if an Inquiry were intended, or that can be thought

Mr Alex. Hume Campbell.

An. 15. Geo. II. to carry any personal Resentment? If an Hon. Gendeman near him had talk'd so upon this Question, I should not have been surprised, because, I believe, there is nothing he dreads fo much; and when one's Mind is strongly possessed with the Fear of any thing, the Imagination often presents the Phantom when there is no real Appearance; but as I am convinced, the Hon. Gentleman who spoke last can dread no Inquiry, with respect to himself at least, I am amazed how this Question came to present to his View the Phantom of an Inquiry."

'Sir, there is nothing more in this Question, nor, I believe, any thing more intended by it, than a proper Examination; of those Papers, which were certainly called for with the Defign of having them properly examined; and as they cannot be properly examined without referring them to a Select Committee, I hope to shew such Reasons for our complying with the Motion, as cannot be supposed to proceed from any personal Resentment, but I must beg Leave to say a Word or two about Inquiries in general, which the Hon. Gentleman has represented in so hideous a Light. He has told us, Sir, that Parliamentary Inquiries always raise Divisions, Heats, and Animofities, and have sometimes raised a Civil War in On the contrary, I will venture to affirm, the Kingdom. from the whole Tenor of our History, that the Preventing or Opposing of a Parliamentary Inquiry has always had that Effect; and that the giving Way to a Parliamentary Inquiry, when the Majority of the Nation call'd for it, never raised any. The Rebellion at the Beginning of the late Reign, was not occasioned by the Parliamentary Inquiry then set on Foot, but by a Jacobite Spirit which at that Time but too univerfally prevailed in the Nation. Whatever Transgressions the former Ministers had been guilty of, they had found Means to let themselves at the Head of a very numerous and powerful Party in the Nation, who were attached to them, not by Bribery and Corruption, or any felfish View, but from a real, tho' very wrong Principle. That Party wanted nothing but a Head for flying to Arms, and the Inquiry, indeed, furnished them with what they wanted. But is this the Case at present? Can it be said, that our present Ministers have any Party attached to them from Principle? They have no Party but such as are attached to them from Motives of Self-Interest, and as soon as you take from them the Distribution of the Loaves and Fishes, their Followers will defert them of course.'

We have therefore, Sir, nothing to fear from fetting up a Parliamentary Inquiry, but a great deal from our neglecting it. The whole Nation, at least all those who dare speak their their Minds, call loudly for it, and if it should be prevented, A2, 15. Geo. II. or defeated by a Court Majority in Parliament, it will raise a general Disaffection to our Government. Willour Friends abroad put any Trust or Considence in such a Government? Can our Enemies dread any Thing from such a Government? Sir, it is well known, both abroad and at home, that an unpopular Government in this Kingdom never did, nor, I hope, ever can act with Vigour or Spirit. I fay, I hope, it never can; for this must be the Case as long as there is the least Relick of Liberty amongst us. All those fatal Consequences therefore, which the Hon. Gentleman has been pleased to prognofficate from our entering upon an Inquiry into our late Conduct, may more naturally, and more reasonably be prognosticated, nay, must necessarily ensue, from our not giving the Nation the Satisfaction they expected from this new Parliament. Our Friends abroad will despair: Our Enemies will rejoice. For this Reason, Sir, so far as I can judge at prefent, I shall give my Vote for an Inquiry as soon as it shall be proposed; and I shall be for carrying it through with all possible Strictness, without any personal Prejudice. I have no Refentment against any but those who are suspected of being the Enemies and Betrayers of their Country, and against such I shall always have a Resentment, till I fee them cleared by an honest and fair Inquiry."

But I beg Pardon, Sir, for taking up so much of your Time upon this Subject; for the prefent Question is not about an Inquiry, it has nothing to do in the Debate; much less with Admonitions against personal Piques and Animosities; for from what is now proposed, no Man can sear a personal Attack, unless he be conscious, that from these Papers something criminal in his Conduct may be discovered; and I hope no Member of this House will refuse doing his Duty towards his Sovereign, for fear some Crime should thereby be discovered in any Minister. I say, doing his Duty towards his Sovereign, Sir, for whether we shall do so or no, is the Question, and the only Question now before us. His Majerty, in his most gracious Speech from the Throne, has expressly required our Counsel and Assistance; Can we give him either without first knowing how? Can we know how, without first examining into the present State of Asfairs both abroad and at home? Would not a Physician be a Madman, to prescribe to a Patient, without first examining into the State of his Distemper, the Causes from which it arole, and the Remedies that had before been applied? This is our Case at present. His Majesty has defired our Counsel: If he had not, we are bound to give it, confidering the present melancholy State of Affairs; and for this Purpose we ought to examine into it as narrowly as we can.

'I have not Sir, perused many of the Papers mentioned in this Motion: Neither shall I, unless this Motion be agreed to; for who would peruse such Piles of Papers, without an Expectation at least, that his Perusal might probably be attended with some good Effect. But from the very Titles of them, I can see, that it is absolutely necessary to have all these Papers, at least, narrowly look'd into, before we can know any Thing about the political Distemper which at present threaten the Liberties of this Nation, as well as the Libertics of Europe, with an immediate Diffolution. We are by Treaty obliged to affift the Queen of Hungary against the French and Bavarians, because they directly attack the Pragmatick Sanction; but we are not obliged by Treaty to assist her against the King of Prussia, because he afferts only what he pretends to be the antient Rights of his House. We are therefore both in Honour and Justice obliged to inquire into the Foundation of this Dispute; for if Prussia's Claim be just, and the Queen of Hungary obstinately resuses to do him Justice, it will free us from the Engagement we are under, of affilling her against the French and Bavarians; because, tho' we have guarantied the Pragmatick Sanction, yet if she by her Obstinacy makes it more difficult and dangerous for us to perform that Guaranty, than it would have been otherwise, it frees us both in Equity and Honour from that Engagement.'

'This, Sir, must shew how absolutely necessary it is for us to examine strictly into the Contents of the Letters, Memorials, and Papers presented to us, before we can give any Advice to his Majesty, with regard to the present State of Affairs in Europe; and particularly, Sir, I must mention the Treaty between his Majesty and the Queen of Hungary, dated at Hanover, June 13, 1741. Surely this Treaty, with every Paper, previous and consequent, relating to it, ought to be examined in the strictest Manner, before we can judge how Matters stands between us and the Queen of Hungary.'

Then, Sir, with regard to our War with Spain, as there have been many Disputes between France and us, on Account of that War, and as its Continuance very much depends upon the impartial as well as neutral Behaviour of the French, we ought certainly to examine carefully the Papers, before we offer any Advice to his Majesty, relating to the suture Conduct of the War. The Case may stand between the King of Prussia and Queen of Hungary, so as to free us from any Obligation to assist her; but if it should appear, that the French have assisted the Spaniards as much as they could in an underhand Manner, we may from thence judge, judge, that they will declare openly against us, as soon as An. 15. Geo. II. they have settled the Affairs of Germany to their Mind, This should make us, without any other Consideration, resolve to assist the Queen of Hungary in the most strenuous Manner, let the Consequence be what it will. Nay, I don't know, but that it should make us immediately declare War against France; for it would be better to declare against her. whill the is engaged in War with the Queen of Hungary. than to wait for her declaring against us, after the has reduced the Queen of Hungary to her own Terms.'

These Arguments, I hope, the Hon. Gentleman cannot fay proceed from any personal Resentment. It is not possible for any one to suppose, that a Parliamentary Prosecution would be the Consequence of this Motion, without first supposing, that our Ministers have been guilty of some criminal Sort of Conduct; and this is a Supposition which I shall not make, left the Hon. Gentleman should say, it proceeds from particular Prejudice: Surely the Parliament may offer Advice, and take the proper Methods for being able to do fo, without fetting up an Inquiry. None of the Arguments he has made use of against an Inquiry can, therefore, operate in the least against this Motion, which tends merely to enable us to perform, as we ought, that Duty his Majesty has required of us; and the sooner we set about the Performance of that Duty, it will be the better both for ourselves and our Friends. The publick Affairs of this Nation have for many Years past, been solely directed by his Majetty's inferior Councils, for his great and supreme Council has never once offered any Advice, but fuch as was dictated by the Minister: Both the Affairs of this Nation, and the Affairs of Europe, are at last brought into the unnost Distress: Whether the Advice his Majetty has received from his inferior Councils has any Way contributed to this Diffress, I shall not pretend to determine; but it is certain, their Advice has not prevented it, nor have they applied fo much as one Remedy, tho' the Dillress has been apparent for above this Twelvemonth. It is therefore high Time for his Majetty's great Council to interpole with its Advice. From fuch an Interpolition our Friends will conceive Hopes, our Enemies Apprehentions."

This, Sir, makes me extremely follicitous about the Succels of this Motion; because the Fate of Europe, as well as of this Nation, in agreat Measure, depends upon it. If this Motion be agreed to. I shall expect to see the Queen of Hungary continue to refilt the Torrent of Enemies that have broke in upon her, with that furpriling Firmnels of Mind the has hitherto manifelled: If this Motion should be rejected, especi1741.

An. 15. Geo. 11. ally if by a great Majority, I fear, it may have a most mischievous Effect upon her Councils, by making them despair, and consequently submit; I shall therefore heartly give my

Mr Winnington. Hereupon Mr Winnington " spoke to the following Effect:

Mr Speaker,

. Whatever Gentlemen may pretend, it is evident, that the Motion now under our Confideration, must produce an Inquiry, and a very general one too. You are defired to appoint a Select Committee, and, I suppose, the next Motion will be to make it a Secret one; to do what? To examine the feveral Papers mentioned in the Motion, and to report what they may think material in them. Is not this a Motion for an Enquiry into the Affairs which those Papers relate to? It is certainly therefore a Motion for a particular Inquiry. But can any one imagine the Inquiry will cease there? An Inquiry into those Affairs will naturally, and even necessarily, produce an Inquiry into other Affairs, and those again into others; so that the Inquiry will. at laft, become general, and may extend itself farther back than most People now dream of; for there is such a Concatenation between State Affairs, domestick and foreign. precedent and subsequent, that it is impossible to judge of one without a thorough Infight into all the reft, till you arrive at a certain Crifis, when the whole Affairs of the Nation began to take a new Turn, which probably will be as far back as the Accession of his late Majesty to the Throne.

Whether we can find Twenty-one Persons in this House, fit to be intrusted with all the Secrets of our Government, is what I very much question, but this I am fore of, that when a Secret Committee is once named, and inveiled with the usual Powers, no one can tell how far they will go. The Mind of Man is naturally curious, and fond of diving into Secrets, especially when they think they may thereby raise their Character, pursue their Interest, or grafify their Relentment. We may therefore suppose, that this Secret Committee will extend their Inquiries as far as poffible, and that in every Report they make, they will refer it to some Affair not yet inquired into. This will give them a Pretence for defiring an Extension of Power, and as the Majority of the House will probably be as curious as they, their Defire will be readily granted. Thus the House, instead of putting a Stop to their Progress, will probably encourage it, and his Majelly can put an End to it no other Way than by a Diffolation or Prorogation, either of which would throw all Things into Confusion. From An. 15. Geo. 11. whence we may fee, that our agreeing to this Motion must necessarily terminate in a general Inquiry into the Conduct of our publick Affairs, for God knows how many Years pall; and this, besides discovering all the Secrets of our Government to our Enemies, would certainly raise great Animolities and Heart-burnings amongst us, which as a Time when we are in open War with Spain, and when the Liberties of Europe stand fo much in need of our Affistance. might be attended with Consequences which I tremble to think of.

A Civil War, Sir, is in itself a most terrible Evil, but confidering the present Circumstances of Things, that would be one of the least Evils we should have to fear; for while we were engaged in cutting one another's Throats, the Liberties of Europe would be undone, and the Nation itself would fall a Prey to its most antient and most inveterate Enemy. That an Inquiry into the past Conduct of our publick Affairs would have such a Tendency, has, I think, been confessed by those who have spoke in Favour of this Motion. It has been allowed, that the Inquiry at the Beginning of the late King's Reign, furnished a Head for the ditaffected Party; and that this was the Caufe of the Rebellion must likewise be allowed, for without a Head, the Difaffected, or if you please, the Party attached to the former Administration, could never have had Recourse to Arms. How are we fure, that an Inquiry at this Time may not produce the same Effect? It is gratis dictum to lay, that no Man is attached to our present Administration but from Motives of Self-Interest: I might as well say, that none but Jacobites and Republicans are against it.

All those who approve of our publick Measures, and are convinced that nothing has been done amil's, must be attached to the Government from a Principle of Jullice, and would, nay ought to stand up against their being unjustly condemned by a prevailing Faction in Parliament; we are not therefore to suppose, that our present Ministers would be deferted by all their Friends, upon a Censure's being unjustly passed against them in Parliament. And as Secret Committees generally pique themselves upon finding Fault, and upon getting their Opinion approved of by a Majority, such a Censure would probably be the Consequence of an Inquiry, which might put the Friends of our they could not defend them by a Majority of Voices in Par-

An. 15. Geo. 11. 'To this I must add, Sir, the Danger of his Majesty being prevailed on to think, that the Profecution of his M nisters proceeded from a Jacobite or Republican Spirit i Parliament, and that tho' the Attack was first made upon his Ministers, it was principally designed against himself, o against the most essential Prerogatives of his Crown. Belief his Majesty may the more easily be brought into, fro the Example of the Parliament of the Year 1640. The Parliament, or at least the principal Leaders of it, had to tainly, from the very Beginning, a Defign against s Crown itself, but they covered their Delign under the Clos of a Desire to punish guilty Ministers, and a Zeal for th very Constitution which they intended to destroy. The attack'd the King's Ministers, and those Ministers, perhap deserved the Attack, but the Consequence shewed, the their chief Delign was against the Crown. In this, it now certain, they were encouraged by the Court of France and some of them, perhaps, were bribed by French Gold May not the same Thing happen again? May not the M jority of this House be influenced by a Jacobite or Republ can Spirit, Supported by French Promises and French Gold If this should happen to be the Case, his Majesty would ! obliged to defend himself and his Ministers by Force Arms; and suppose this were not really the Case, yet if h Majetty supposed it were, the Effect would be the same.

"We should therefore, Sir, be extremely cautious of g ing upon an Inquiry into the Conduct of Ministers, unless have some very strong Proofs of their being guilty, an fuch as may give our Sovereiga Reason to think they are a Such Proofs are necessary not only in Justice to our Minister who ought not to be subjected to the Trouble and Dang of a Trial, without any Sort of Proof, but also in refr to our Sovereign, and in order to prevent his having any spicion, that the Inquiry proceeds from Disaffection to him or from a concealed Defign against his Crown and Digniti Such a Caution is necessary at all Times, but especially a present, on Account of the Circumstances of our Affair both domellick and foreign. With regard to our dometlic Affairs, it is well known, that there is still a very from Spirit of Jacobitism in the Country, and therefore, when Spirit of Inquiry prevails in Parliament, the King has Reafon to believe it proceeds from a Spirit of Jacobitism, unle by the Proofs upon which that Inquiry is founded, he thou be convinced, that there are very good Reasons to suspen his Minuters having been guilty of Misconduct. Then wit regard to the Circumstances of our Affairs abroad, we are it open War with Spain, and upon very bad Terms with

A Dissension between his states the War against Spain with Vigour, or to give any to both, to raise, if possible, such a Dissension: the Projects of France: It is therefore the set of both, to raise, if possible, such a Dissension: the Purpose to procure an Attack upon the best Miners of the Crown. But the Inquiry now proposed is not, it seems, with a to a linguist of his Manisters, or to discoto actual any of his Majesty's Ministers, or to discoby Counted any of his waythy of Counted, but merely 25 to give his Majesty our Counsel and Advice Tent Pollure of Affairs. Sir, if the Advocates have such a Knowledge of our ancient Cony pretend, they must know, that to counsel he proper Bufinels of the other House: Our onlent: Our very Writs shew, that this is vince; and therefore, I think, we ought not in offering our Advice, except when it is afk'd by his Majesty. In his he Throne his Majesty has, 'tis true, told both his Part of the Speech is addressed to both, ere of Affairs makes our Counsel and Assistance Whether these two Words ought to be taken Parately is the Queltion? According to our anonle they ought to be taken separately : The Coursel ought to be supposed to be directed to the House, and the Word Affifiance to this. The Peers coadvile such Measures as they think necessary : The mona are to assist by granting such Sums as are necessary carrying those Measures into Execution. But suppose Words were to be taken jointly, we are not from hence anclude, that we are to determine what Points we are we our Advice upon. Geo. II.

To this I must add, Sir, the Danger of his Majesty's being prevailed on to think, that the Profecution of his Minifters proceeded from a Jacobite or Republican Spirit in Parliament, and that tho the Attack was first made upon his Ministers, it was principally defigned against himself, or against the most essential Prerogatives of his Crown. This Belief his Majesty may the more easily be brought into, from the Example of the Parliament of the Year 1640. That Parliament, or at least the principal Leaders of it, had certainly, from the very Beginning, a Defign against the Crown itself, but they covered their Design under the Cloak of a Defire to punish guilty Ministers, and a Zeal for that very Conflication which they intended to destroy. They attack'd the King's Ministers, and those Ministers, perhaps, deserved the Attack, but the Consequence shewed, that their chief Design was against the Crown. In this, it is now certain, they were encouraged by the Court of France. and some of them, perhaps, were bribed by Frenth Gold. May not the same Thing happen again? May not the Majority of this House be influenced by a Jacobite or Republican Spirit, supported by French Promises and French Gold? If this should happen to be the Case, his Majesty would be obliged to defend himself and his Ministers by Force of Arms; and suppose this were not really the Case, yet if his Majesty supposed it were, the Effect would be the same.

We should therefore, Sir, be extremely cautious of going upon an Inquiry into the Conduct of Ministers, unless we have some very strong Proofs of their being guilty, and fuch as may give our Sovereign Reason to think they are to. Such Proofs are necessary not only in Justice to our Minister. who ought not to be subjected to the Trouble and Danger of a Trial, without any Sort of Proof, but also in respect to our Sovereign, and in order to prevent his having any 5uspicion, that the Inquiry proceeds from Disaffection to him. or from a concealed Defign against his Crown and Dignity. Such a Caution is necessary at all Times, but especially as present, on Account of the Circumstances of our Affairs, both domestick and foreign. With regard to our domestick Affairs, it is well known, that there is still a very strong Spirit of Jacobitism in the Country, and therefore, when a Spirit of Inquiry prevails in Parliament, the King has Reafon to believe it proceeds from a Spirit of Jacobitism, unless by the Proofs upon which that Inquiry is founded, he should he convinced, that there are very good Reasons to suspect his Ministers having been guilty of Misconduct. An. 15. Geo. II. ' To this I must add, Sir, the Danger of his Majesty's being prevailed on to think, that the Profecution of his Minillers proceeded from a Jacobite or Republican Spirit in Parliament, and that tho' the Attack was first made upon his Ministers, it was principally designed against himself, or against the most essential Prerogatives of his Crown. This Belief his Majesty may the more easily be brought into, from the Example of the Parliament of the Year 1640. That Parliament, or at least the principal Leaders of it, had certainly, from the very Beginning, a Defign against the Crown itself, but they covered their Design under the Cloak of a Defire to punish guilty Ministers, and a Zeal for that very Constitution which they intended to destroy. They attack'd the King's Ministers, and those Ministers, perhaps, deferved the Attack, but the Confequence shewed, that their chief Design was against the Crown. In this, it is now certain, they were encouraged by the Court of France. and some of them, perhaps, were bribed by French Gold. May not the same Thing happen again? May not the Majority of this House be influenced by a Jacobite or Republican Spirit, Supported by French Promises and French Gold? If this should happen to be the Case, his Majesty would be obliged to defend himself and his Ministers by Force of Arms; and suppose this were not really the Case, yet if his Majetty supposed it were, the Effect would be the same.

. We should therefore, Sir, be extremely cautious of going upon an Inquiry into the Conduct of Ministers, unless we have some very strong Proofs of their being guilty, and fuch as may give our Sovereign Reason to think they are so. Such Proofs are necessary not only in Justice to our Ministers, who ought not to be subjected to the Trouble and Danger of a Trial, without any Sort of Proof, but also in respect to our Sovereign, and in order to prevent his having any Suspicion, that the Inquiry proceeds from Disaffection to him, or from a concealed Defign against his Crown and Dignity. Such a Caution is necessary at all Times, but especially at present, on Account of the Circumstances of our Affairs, both domestick and foreign. With regard to our domestick Affairs, it is well known, that there is still a very strong Spirit of Jacobitism in the Country, and therefore, when a Spirit of Inquiry prevails in Parliament, the King has Reafon to believe it proceeds from a Spirit of Jacobitism, unless by the Proofs upon which that Inquiry is founded, he should be convinced, that there are very good Reasons to suspect his Ministers having been guilty of Misconduct. Then with regard to the Circumstances of our Asfairs abroad, we are in open War with Spain, and upon very bad Terms with France.

France, because of her Apprehensions lest we should defeat An. 15. Geo. II. her ambitious Designs in Europe, by giving effectual Assistance to the Queen of Hungary. A Dissension between his Majesty and his Parliament would prevent our being able to prosecute the War against Spain with Vigour, or to give any Disturbance to the Projects of France: It is therefore the Interest of both, to raise, if possible, such a Dissension; and for that Purpose to procure an Attack upon the best Ministers of the Crown. This his Majesty has, at this Time especially, great Reason to be jealous of; and if he should see any of his Ministers attacked in Parliament without Proof, without so much as an Allegation of any particular criminal Fact, would not he have great Reason to conclude, that the Attack proceeded from French and Spanish Gold, and that according to the old Maxim, Principiis obsta, he was obliged, both for his own Safety, and the Safety of his Kingdoms, to Rifle it in its Infancy.

But the Inquiry now proposed is not, it seems, with a Defign to attack any of his Majesty's Ministers, or to discover any Crimes or Overfights in their Conduct, but merely to enable us to give his Majesty our Counsel and Advice upon the present Posture of Affairs. Sir, if the Advocates for this Motion have such a Knowledge of our ancient Conflitution as they pretend, they must know, that to counsel or advise is the proper Business of the other House: Our Buliness is to consent: Our very Writs shew, that this is our proper Province; and therefore, I think, we ought not to be forward in offering our Advice, except when it is particularly and expressly ask'd by his Majesty. In his Speech from the Throne his Majesty has, 'tis true, told both Houses, for this Part of the Speech is addressed to both, that the Posture of Affairs makes our Counsel and Assistance necessary. Whether these two Words ought to be taken jointly or separately is the Question? According to our antient Constitution, they ought to be taken separately: The Word Counsel ought to be supposed to be directed to the other House, and the Word Affifiance to this. The Peers are to advise such Measures as they think necessary: The Commons are to affift by granting such Sums as are necessary for carrying those Measures into Execution. But suppose the Words were to be taken jointly, we are not from hence to conclude, that we are to determine what Points we are to give our Advice upon. We ought to suppose, that his Majetty will afterwards communicate to us, by Message, the Points upon which he defires our Advice; and when he does so, he will certainly order all the necellary Papers to be laid before the House, or if they are of so secret a Nature 1761.

An 15 Geo. If, that they ought not to be laid before fuch a numerous Affembly, he will defire us to appoint a Secret Committee for inspecting such Papers as he may think he to communicate. To wais for such a Meffage would be acting in our proper Sphere, and with due Respect to our Sovereign, agreeably to our antient and real Constitution. To act otherwise, would be a Breach of our Duty to our Sovereign, and fuch an Incroachment upon our Constitution, as might at this Juncture be of the most dangerous Consequence to the Lie berties of Europe, as well as the Liberties of our native tog thin, he days he was blooked

After what I have faid, Sir, I believe, I may freely declare, that I neither think it my Duty, nor do I think I' have any Call to examine how Affairs stand between us and the Queen of Hungary, and much less between her and the King of Pruffia; nor do I think we ought to examine how Matters fland between France and us with regard to our War with Spain. When his Majesty desires our Advice. it will then, and not till then, be necessary to examine the Papers already laid before us, or fuch as may hereafter be laid before us, relating to any of the Points upon which that Advice is defired; and if his Majesty should require it. but not otherwise, I shall be for appointing a Select and Secret Committee for examining into fuch Papers as his Manie jefly tells us are not proper to be divulged to the whole House.

* Thus, Sir, it must appear, that if the Motion now before us be defign'd as a Foundation for an Inquiry into the Conduct of our Ministers, it ought not to be complied wish; and if it be defign'd only as a Step towards enabling us to give his Majesty our Advice, it is too early. Let us examine it therefore in what Light we will, it appears to be improper. This is my fincere Opinion of it, and for this Reason, I hope the honourable Gentleman will excuse me, if I give my Negative to his Motion.'

Mr Winnington was answered by Sir Watkin Williams Sir Watkin Williams Wynnne. Wynne : all it which the control of the control of the

Gentleman has made use of, and by subtlituting the Word Minister, which is the only proper Word to be made use of in this House, when we talk of any publick Affair, instead of the Word Sovereign, you will then fee his Arguments in their true Light.

" He fays, we ought never to inquire into the Conduct of Ministers, or to speak more properly, of one sole Minister. unless we have such Proofs against him as must convince that Minister of his having been in the wrong : and the Reason for this, he fays, is, left that Minister should suspect, or rather pretend, that the Inquiry into his Conduct proceeded from a Jacobite or Republican Spirit, or from the Influence of Foreign Gold. Sir, upon such a Principle could the Parliament ever inquire into the Conduct of any Minister? A Minister may be conscious of his Crimes or Misconduct : but could the Parliament, previous to any Inquiry, ever have fuch Proofs against him, as would induce him to confess his having been weak or criminal? If the Weakness of his Conduct were from its Effects apparent to the whole Nation, he would pretend, that those Effects proceeded from Accidents that could not be forefeen or provided against, or from the Ambition, Obstinacy, or Weakness of Foreign Courts, and not from any Weakness in the Measures he had pursued. Suppose we had positive Evidence against him: Suppose we had Letters under his Hand, for proving his having been guilty of the most treasonable Practices; a guilty Minister would pretend, that the Letters were forged, or that the Witnesses were sacobites, or Republicans, or brib'd by Foreign Gold, and therefore not to be credited. In short, Sir, the more guilty a Minister is, the more positively, the more arrogantly, will he inful upon his Innocence, and that therefore he ought not be put to the Trouble of defending himfelf against a Parliamentary Inquiry. Thus we must never inquire into the Behaviour of any Minister while he continues in that Station, unless it be at his own Defire, and with a View to jullify and applaud his Wisdom and Conduct; nor into the Behaviour of any discarded Minister, unless it be to satisfy the Revenge of some succeeding one; and what a pretty ministerial Tool this Argument would make of a Parliament, I shall leave to the Confideration of those Gentlemen who make use of it.

For my Part, Sir, I shall always be of Opinion, that the least Suspicion of Wickedness, the least Suspicion of Weakness, in the Conduct of any publick Affair, or in the Conduct of our publick Affairs in general, is a sufficient Fourdation for a Parliamentary Inquiry. Nay, such Inquiries

An. 15. Geo. II. ought to be often fet on Foot, even when there is no Saspicion of any Misconduct. Shall a Minister say, I have been a very honest and faithful Minister, and therefore I ought not to be put to the Trouble of having my Conduct inquir'd into. Sir, a Steward may as well fay, I have been a very honeft Man and a good Steward, and therefore ought not to be put to the Trouble of passing my Accounts. Every Gentleman knows, that the proper, and indeed the only Way to keep a Steward honest, is to make him frequently pass his Accounts. A good Steward will defire it, and so will a good Minister; for a Minister is but a Steward for the Publick; and therefore when I find a Minister using all his Art to evade or prevent a Parliamentary Inquiry, it will always give me a Suspicion of his Conduct, and consequently will with me be a prevailing Argument for fetting up immediately an impartial and strict Inquiry. This, Sir, was the Maxim of our Ancestors: By this Maxim they have handed down to us our Liberties and Properties. Without this Maxim we shall hand nothing down to our Pollerity, but Slavery and Poverty.

A Civil War, I shall grant, Sir, is a terrible Missortune; but it is far from being the most terrible; for I had rather fee my Country engag'd for twenty Years in a Civil War. than to fee it tamely submit but for one Year to ministerial Bondage; therefore, if this Country should ever be reduc'd to the fatal Dilemma of being oblig'd to give up its Liberties, or engage in a Civil War, I hope no true Britan would balance a Moment in his Choice. Thank God! this is not our Case at present. I hope the Fate of this Question will shew it is not our Case; for from our Inquiry into the Conduct of our present Ministers, no Civil War, I am sure, can enfue. If they are innocent, an impartial Inquiry will justify their Conduct. To suppose otherwise, would be offering the highest Indignity to this House, which has never impeach'd, nor pass'd any Censure upon a Minister without a justifiable Cause. If our Ministers are guilty, they ought to be punish'd, and his Majesty has too much Wisdom to think of protecting a guilty Minister against the Justice of the Nation. To suppose otherwise, would be offering the highest Insult to the Crown.

What Motives Gentlemen may have for being attach'd to our present Ministers, I do not know, nor shall determine; but when Gentlemen posses'd of Posts which they got by his Favour, and perhaps hold at his Pleasure, are almost the only Persons that appear in his Vindication; the Presumption militates throngly against the Disinterestedness of their Behaviour, as well as against the Uprightness of his Conduct ; and whatever such Gentlemen may pretend, if his An. 15. Geo. II. Majesty should give his Minister up to national Justice, I believe, no Man in the Kingdom apprehends, that any of them would attempt drawing their Swords in his Defence. The Danger of a Civil War is therefore not in the least to be apprehended from a fair Inquiry into our Minister's Conduct; but confidering the Suspicions and Expectations of the People, if this Session of Parliament should end without such an Inquiry, a Civil War may very probably be the Confequence. The People will not, but his Majesty may suppose, that our Neglect to inquire proceeds from our Opinion of his Innocence. The People feel the Effects of his Misconduct, and may, perhaps, feel them every Day more and more: This will make them imagine, that our Neglect to inquire proceeds not from our having a good Opinion of his Conduct, but from our having a Share in his Plunder. On the other hand, his Majesty neither does, not can feel those Effects: At least he cannot feel them till it is too late to prevent the Consequences; and as he has a good Opinion of his Parliament, he will naturally suppose the Conduct of his Minister to be wife and upright, because his Parliament has neither condemned it, nor so much as inquired into it. Thus his Majelly may be prevailed on to continue him at the Head of the Administration, notwithstanding the People's being generally convinced, that he is every Day undermining their Liberties, by Means of a venal and corrrupt Parliament; and if this should be the Case, I must conclude, that a Civil War will certainly enfue, or I must form a much more disagreeable Conclusion, which is, that the People of this Country have so much degenerated from the Virtue and Courage of their Ancestors, that they chuse rather to submit tamely to Slavery, than to run the Risk of afferting their Liberties by the Sword.'

A Republican and Enthusiastical Spirit join'd together, was, 'tis true, Sir, the ultimate Cause of the Ruin of King Charles the First, but it was far from being the Original. The first and original Cause of the Ruin of that unfortunate Prince, was his allowing himself to be governed, for the first fifteen Years of his Reign, by Ministers that were hateful to the People, and protecting those Ministers against all Inquiries and Profecutions in Parliament. By this means he raised and fomented a Republican Spirit in the Nation, to such a Degree, that the People would not be satisfied with the Sacrisce of a sew. They had conceived such a Jealousy of the Power of the Crown, by the ill Use his Ministers made of it, that nothing would satisfy them but a Diminution of that Power; and his taking Arms in De-

An. 15 Geo. H. fence of that Power, and in Opposition to the prevailing Spirit of this Nation, was what brought him at the last to the fatal Catastrophe he met with: His untimely End ought to be a Warning to all future Ministers, that have any Regard to their Master, to submit in Time to a fair Inquiry, or if they be conscious of Guilt, to fly from that Fate which fuch an Inquiry must bring them to; and, I hope, it will be an Example to all future Kings of this Country, to let their Favour towards a Minister have the same Period with the Favour of the People. In a free Country the Prince's Favour ought to proceed from the Fayour and Elleem a Man has acquired among the People. and it must have the same Period, or the Liberties of the People must be overturned; for a free People will not be governed by a Man they hate or despise.'

"This, we know, his present Majesty is fully sensible of. and therefore we need be under no Apprehensions, that He will obstruct an Examination, or endeavour to protect a Minifler after he has been found guilty upon a fair Inquiry into his Conduct; but suppose we were so unlucky as to have a Prince upon the Throne, that would obilinately protect a weak or wicked Minister against the Justice of his Parliament, and the Resentment of his People, should we fit here. and patiently fee the Nation ruined by the Minister's Weakness, or our Liberties undermined, and the People plundered and oppressed by his Wickedness? Should we, I say, patiently bear this, for Fear of involving the Nation in a Civil War? I hope, I shall never hear fuch a cowardly Doctrine inculcated within these Walls. It is a Doctrine that breathes nothing but Slavery, and fuch as will never, I hope, be harbour'd in the Breast of any British Subject.

* The Fears, therefore, which the Hon. Gentleman has been pleased to instill into us, are either fantastical, or they are such as no Member of this House ought to allow to have the least Influence upon his Conduct, with regard to the present Question. Suppose a general Inquiry should be the Consequence of our appointing the Select Committee now moved for: Suppose that Inquiry should extend itself as far back as the Hon. Gentleman feems to apprehend, could it be of any bad Consequence to the Nation? On the contrary, it would be of great Service, because it would shew our future Ministers, that however quietly they might pals through the Course of their Administration, their Conduct would fome Time or other be impartially inquired into; and as former Administrations have not been free from Suspicions. no more than the prefent, I hope it would be of Service to them them too, by convincing the World that those Suspicions An. 15. Geo. II.

I hope I have now fly wn, that the Hon. Gentleman's Arguments against this Motion are of no Weight, even upon the Supposition of its being intended as the first Step towards a general Inquiry; and his Argument against it, upon the Supposition of its being intended only as a necessary Step towards enabling as to give his Majesty proper Advice in the present Posture of Affairs, will appear to be of no greater Weight, especially, if by the same Change of Words, we state his Argument in its true Light. He has told us, that if we are to give any Advice to our Sovereign, for whether we ought to do fo feems with him to be a Doubt, we ought not to think of giving Advice, unless his Majesty not only defires it in general Terms, by his Speech from the Throne, but likewise by Message, directs us to the particular Point upon which we are to give our Advice. We all know, Sir, that Speeches from the Throne, and Messages from the Crown, are in this House supposed to be the Speeches and Meffages of the Minister; and therefore, to put this Argument in the Language of Parliament, it will stand thus: Let us be never so fully convinced of our Sovereign's being · milled by his Minister, we ought not to give him any Advice, unless that Minister points out to us by Message, the · Subject upon which we are to give Advice.' I hope it will be granted, Sir, that an Address to remove a Minister is a Sort of Advice, and often a very wholesome Piece of Advice, but according to this Dostrine, we can never advise our Sovereign to remove any Minister.'

I am really forry, Sir, for being obliged to fet the Abfurdity of this Doctrine in such a strong Light; but in Justice to my Country I could not avoid it. If we are never to advise our Sovereign in any Case, but such as is pointed our to us by his Minister, no Minister will ever desire the Advice of Parliament but when he is affured, they will advise just as he has before resolved, and such Advice can never be of any Service to the King, tho' it may be to the Minister, by taking the Odium of a bad Measure off of his Shoulders, and fixing it upon the Parliament; but I hope I shall never see such a Parliament in Great Britain.

Now, Sir, with regard to the Right we have, or the Obligation we lie under, of offering our Advice to our Sovereign; as the honourable Gentleman feemed to doubt of it, I hope, I shall be indulged a few Words upon the Subject. To consult and advise is, I shall grant, the Business and the Duty of the other House, perhaps more properly than of this; but when the other House happens to be de-

This, Sir, may perhaps, by some Gentlemen be called fleville Doctrine; but it is fuch as will be followed by who have a greater Inclination to ferve their Country in will ment, than to find fault with the Conduct of their wave you or the Conduct of Ministers, call it which you for I do not know how to distinguish, unless it be, That we ought to impute to our Sovereign every Thing we hick right, and to his Ministers every Thing we think With regard to domestick Affairs, we have a much greater Latitude; because we may more freely call all Papers relating to any fuch Affair, and have greater Meeton to suspect, that Ministers will, in Affairs of this kand, give fuch Advice as may most conduce to their own But it cannot be faid, that the Papers opoled to be referred to a Select Committee, have the Relation to any Affair of this Kind. If we should the defired to grant Money for the Affiltance of the Queen Mungary, it will then be Time enough to confider whether we ought to do fo. For determining this Question, I think we have no Occasion to examine any Papers of State, our common News Papers must convince us, that we ought to comply with such a Demand; and as to the Quantum of that Grant, we must be convinced, that she stands in Need of more than this Nation can afford to give.

Sir, we can have no Occasion to refer the Papers mentioned in this Motion to a Secret Committee, unless we have a Mind to make that Committee a Committee of Inquiry, and to enable them to inquire into the Conduct of all our Publick Affairs both foreign and domestick, for many Years past. This I believe to be the real Intention of the Motion, and for this Reason I cannot agree to it; because the establishing of such a Committee at such a critical Conjuncture, would be of the most dangerous Consequence to Europe in general, as well as to this Nation in particular. By this the whole Frame of our Government would be alfered, and would continue so, during the Continuance of that Committee. It would be an establishing Imperium me Imperio, or rather a Government set up by this House, diffinct from, and superior to our constitutional Governinent; for this Committee must either consist of such as are Friends to the King's Ministers, or such as are their declared Enemies. If of the former, it would give no Satisfaction to the People, and if of the latter, they would probably in a short Time get the entire Management of 7741.

acted over again. To see all his Mujesty's present Ministers imprisoned or forced into Exile, and every new Officer he should name without their Direction, with all shade that appear'd as Friends to the Crown, declared Delinquents. What this Confusion might end in, God only knows; but in such Circumstances, I am certain, we could neither prosecute the War against Spain with Vigour, not affist in restoring the Ballance of Power in Europe. Nay, we could not even defend ourselves: Our Plantations, with our Possessions in the Mediterranean, would become a Prey to the Spaniards, and the Nation itself would, at last, become a Province to the French, who might send the Pretender to us for a Vice-Roy.

'In the Year 1715, Sir, we had no fatal Consequences to fear from the Secret Committee then appointed. The Nation was not engaged in any War, nor was the Ballance of Power in Danger. The Committee was not to inquire into the Conduct of the then Administration: They were to inquire into the Conduct of a Set of Ministers, who had most justly been dismissed by his late Majesty, with the Contempt they deserved. When the Proposition was made. for appointing a Secret Committee, it was evident from the Complexion of the House, that it would consist of fuchian were Friends to the then Administration; consequently there was no Confusion in our Government to be apprehended 350 for as we were then fituated, I do not think the Rebellion de was a fatal Consequence, since the Disaffected thereby furnish'd the Government with an Opportunity to crush the shour If they had not declared themselves, they would have had; a great Influence upon all future Elections, and by being: joined by discontented Whigs, might, before this Time, have got a Jacobite Parliament, which would have brought. our present Establishment into greater Danger than it could be by an open Rebellion.

Difference between our present Circumstances, and those of 1715; and surely no Man will say, there is now the same Necessay for an Inquiry. I am one of those who thinks there is not the least Occasion for it, and I am convinced there are many such in the Nation. Suspicions have been most artfully propagated against our present Administration, as there will be against all; and if I thought they could a be removed by an impartial Inquiry, I should be for its it but, I am sure, they cannot. Those Suspicions are entertained by none but the Disastected and Disabligad; and nothing, I know, will fatisfy the former but a Sacrifice of An. 15. Geo. 11. our present happy Establishment; and the latter nothing but a Sacrifice of our present Ministers, whether they deferve it or no. A Justification of their Conduct, which would be the Consequence of an impartial Inquiry, would be fo far from allaying the Heats and Animofities without Doors, that it would increase them, and would be made a Handle for raising Suspicions against the Honour of this House, as well as against the Conduct of our Ministers; and this, I hope, will prevail with the House to put a Nepative upon this Motion.

Lord Percival spoke next in Favour of the Motion:

Lord Percival.

As this is the first Time I have had the Honour of offering my Sentiments, I hope to meet with the Indulgence of the House; and I do affure you, Sir, however great I may find it, it shall not induce me to be often troublesome.

I have the greater Reason to intreat this Favour, as I had not received the least previous Intimation, upon what Point the Debate of this Day was like to have turned. But I have endeavour'd to supply this Want of Information, by a diligent Attention to what has been urged on both Sides the Queltion; and the State of the Case before us appears to me in this Light, That Gentlemen on the one Side suspect the Conduct of the Administration, and delire the Affishance of this House to clear up those Suspicions; while on the other Side, the Gentlemen in the Administration, knowing themselves suspected, labour all they can to prevent the House from affording that Assistance.

Now, Sir, as I stand in this House by the Favour of my Constituents *, as independent as any Man can be, and as God has placed me in a Condition of Life to maintain that Independence, I have nothing to induce me to be partial in this Question. I am governed by no Views of Party : I am influenced by no Prejudice.

On the one Hand, those who suspect the Conduct of the Ministry, are not only warranted by the Constitution to entertain Suspicions of this Kind, with regard to any Administration, but urged by the universal Voice of the whole Nation to distrust the Conduct of the present. They are farther warranted by the visible Decay of Trade, by the Diffreis of all our foreign Affairs, and by the ill Success of a War, in which we have been above two Years engaged, with great Superiority of Force against a contemptible Enemy: A War in which we have hitherto reaped neither Honour nor Advantage, and in which, from the Manner

An. 15. Geo. II. of its Management, we have no Profpect of acquiring either, tho' none was ever supplied with greater Liberality by the Nation. Thus the Gentlemen on one Side of the Question seem to act no other Part than what is fair and just, effential to the Honour of this House, and to the Interests and Expectations of their Country. Give me Leave to review the Conduct of the Gentlemen who are thus unhappily suspected. — These urge even these Suspicions as an Argument to excite their Friends to support them, as in a Case of great Extremity; It is their great Endeavour, to be left in the State of being still suspected. - Is it possible that any Man consident in his own Integrity, innocent of what is imputed to him, should exert himself in such a Manner, to prevent your receiving Informations, which might tend to fet his Character in its true Light. No, Sir, this Conduct is by no Means confistent with this favourable Supposition. Ministers, how great soever they may be, know the Importance of a good Reputation: Therefore it is impossible for any Man in his Conscience not to be convinced, from this uncommon Struggle, that the Papers now contended for, contain fomewhat that will fix either Guilt or Error upon those who have engrossed the Direction of the publick Affairs; and in either Case, it is our Duty to inquire, that we may be able to do Justice

The Nccessity, therefore, of some Inquiry being apparent, as well from the Nature of the Thing, as from the Conduct of those who endeavour to prevent it, I shall take no farther Time to ensorce that Point; but I must beg Leave to Answer the Objections, made to the Manner of Inquiry now propos'd.

to our Country, or, at least, to prevent future Mischief.

One Hon. Member has told you, that twenty one Perfons cannot be found among the Members of this House, proper to be intrusted with so great a Power; and yet, it seems, that one Man may be found proper to be intrusted, for twenty Years together, with the whole Revenues, the fole Direction of all Affairs both abroad and at home, the fole Power of this Government without Controul. The same Gentleman has told us, that the Commons cannot delegate such a Power to a Committee. Upon other Occasions I have also heard that Hon. Gentleman affert, that this was not a proper Business for the House, who were too numerous to be trusted with those important Secrets, which must, in Consequence, be laid before them. If, therefore, neither the House ought, nor a Committee can peruse the Papers, necessary for an Examination into the Measures of a Minister, the Result is plainly this, that Ministers must be left to act in what Manner they think fit, without any Apprehension of being cal- An. 15. Geo.H. led to Account.

Another Gentleman has faid, that the Authority of such a Committee would be greater than any ministerial Authority ever known in this or any other Reign. I am very much surprised, that this Gentleman should so soon forget the many Instances of like Nature, already urged in this Debate; but I am more surprised, that he should not remember that samous Committee, confissing of the same Number, and invested with the same Powers, appointed by this House at the Beginning of the Reign of the late King. Surely that Hon. Gentleman, whose Friends seem to think him the Object of this Debate, will not forget it; for if I am not mistaken, he was himself Chairman * of it.'

Gendemen seem not to resteet to whom they speak, when they advance such Doctrines. Sir, I am consident that the very youngest and most unexperienced Member of this House knows, that no Committee of any Kind has Power sarther than to prepare Matter for the House: That no Act of a Committee is of any Force, till confirmed and ratisfied by the House: That its Powers are derived from the House, and must revert to the House again; and God sorbid! Sir, that the Time should be now come, when they stall not be found greater than any ministerial Authority known in this Kingdom.'

Men of Sense, Sir, will not be frightned at these Phantoms. Our Constitution knows far greater Powers; The Charter of King John directs, in Cases of Extremity, not that twenty one Persons shall be appointed to inspect the publick Papers, and to report to this House the Matter which they shall discover therein, but prescribes, that five and Taventy Persons may be appointed to take the Regency into their own Hands, and to exercise the highest Functions of this Government, in which the whole Nation is required to maintain them, till the publick Grievances shall be totally redreffed. This is a Power which was not only prescribed, but often exercised in the Reigns of King John, King Henry the Third, King Edward the Second, and Richard the Sccond. This is, indeed, a Power of a very high Nature, and which I should be very forry to see exerted again in this Country; but, perhaps, a proper Use of that moderate Power which we now contend for, may be the only Means to prevent the Necessity of having Recourse to the other hereafter.

Sir, I am sensible I have troubled you too long, but when I found a Motion that is so reasonable, so violently op-son have been guilty of, than in the Words of the Resolution this House came to, upon their Examination into that Matter, which are,

That the Presence of a regular Body of armed Soldiers, at an Election of Members to serve in Parliament, is an high Infringement of the Liberties of the Subject, a manifest Violation of the Freedom of Elections, and an open Desiance of the Laws and Constitution of this Kingdom.'

And it is impossible, if you well consider the Terms of this Resolution, but that you must have in your Breasts the deepest Serrow and Remorse for this rash Act of yours; which, if it bad not been animadverted upon, might have given the most dangerous Wound to the Constitution of this Free Country, that perhaps it had ever felt. - This Country, Free, because this House is so; which this House can never be, but from the Freedom of Elections to it: And amidst the too many Ways for violating that, none can be more pernicious, because none more quick, decisive and permanent, than what you might unbappily bave set a Precedent for, and which might have grown to an Extremity, under the specious and ready Pretences of Fears and Necoffity, that supersede all Law; a Precedent, that would have received an Authority from the Place it began in-The Seat of the Government and Legistature of this Kingdom.

Necessity, which is to take Place of Law, must be left to the Circumstances of every particular Case. The Act must be presumed to be avrong, inquired into as such, and excused only by the clearest Proofs, that the Necessity of it was real.

What you have done, is againft one of the most effential Parts of the Law of the Kingdom. Has any real Necossay been forwn for it? There might be Fears, there might be fome Danger; but did you try the Strength of the Law to dippel those Fears, and remove that Danger? Did you make Use of those Forvers the Law has invested you with, as Civil Magistrates, for the Preservation of the publick Peace? No-you deserted all that; and wantouts, I tope inadvertently, re- Vet XIII.

The Order of the Day being read, for the House to refolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, to consider of the Petition of the subscribing Merchants and Traders of the City of London, &c. it was ordered, that the Accounts addressed for on the 20th, and presented on the 27th, be referred to the said Committee.

Then the House resolved itself into the said Committee, Proceedings of of which the Lord Mayor of London was Chairman; and, the Grand Com-Mr Glover, an eminent Merchant, open'd to the Committee on the tee the Reasons of their Petition, which he declared to be Merchants Petition, which is produced, not by a Spirit of Discontent; or by the Rage opened to the of Faction, but by an Apprehension that they had long been Committee by denied that Regard which they might justly claim in com. Mr Glover, mon with their Fellow Subjects, and that Protection, which is the End of every Government.

The feveral Facts afferted in the Petition were proved by Papers and Witnesses, and after six Days spent in Examinations, Mr Glover proceeded to sum up the Evidence, and to shew from collective Attestations, that the Merchants had been exposed to the Insults and Rapine of the Spaniards, not by Inattention or Accident, but by one uniform and continued Design.

'A List of 337 Ships taken was proved authentick by the Officers of Insurance, and by the Commanders of the Veffels. Captain White saw 173 Vessels brought into St Seba-fians Port in 18 Months, and one private Insurer paid 22,000 l. for Prizes taken by the Spaniards.

He alledged, 'That the List of 1146 Ships, taken by the French, and laid before the Parliament in 1707, could not be produced as an Apology for the late Captures; because these were taken by whole Fleets, or by the Ships of War of an Enemy, equal in Naval Power to ourselves; because our whole Trade was equally exposed; and because France and Spain were then united.

He infifted, 'That our present Losses are brought upon us by single Privateers, and by little more Power than that of two Towns, St Sebastians and Bilboa.

That the Traders of Bilbon never equipped any Privateers against their Correspondents of England before, but continued in Friendship with them, even when they were not at Peace; nor could any Reason be assigned for their Change of Conduct, but that the Prospect of uncommon Profit from the uncommon Negligence of the English Ministry, was too powerful for Kindness and Respect.

'That the exchanging Prisoners had been so long delayed, that Multitudes have languish'd and perish'd in Captivity; and some who have upon the Prospect of Exchange obtain'd their Liberty, had been oblig'd to preserve their Honour or indemnify their Sureties, by returning to their Enemies.

'That these Delays were wholly to be imputed to the English Administration, it being proved, that the Intendant of the Marine in Biscay, had always had the Power of exchanging Prisoners; that he had omitted no Measures to facilitate the Exchange, 'till he was discouraged by a Breach of Faith on our Part, and that almost all the English Captives were within the Limits of his Jurisdiction.

'That the Spaniards, taken in the Stamboline, were detained for nine Months after the English, whom they confidered as equivalent, had been set at Liberty.

That Captain Maxey follicited the Admiralty and Secretary's Office eight Months, without obtaining the Discharge of three Spanis Prisoners, in Return for himself and two others, and that it was not granted him 'till the very Day, on which the Merchants presented their Petition, it appearing that the Affair must come before the Parliament.

That two Commanders of Merchants Ships were discharged by the Intendant, and only two Fishermen demanded in Exchange. Mr Da Casta undertook to solicit their Release, and the Lords of the Regency immediately ordered that they should be discharg'd. Soon after the Commissary of the Spanish Prisoners proposed to him to forge a new Order from the Admiralty, and insert another Name, which he refused, and was in a few Hours told that the Order was countermanded, but could not find, upon Inquiry, that the Countermand was issued, either by the Regency, or the Admiralty, or Secretary's Office. The Commissary visited him again, and offered him Fifty Pounds to comply with his former Proposal, and again met with a Refusal; a second Order for their Discharge was obtained, which was likewise countermanded.

That scarcely any Ship of War has been ever seen on the Cruize.

'That no Ship was station'd off Cape Clare in Ireland, a very important Post, till eight Months, nor any Ship ordered to cruize before St Sebastians, 'till nine Months after the Declare-

Declaration of the War: That Vessels stationed for impress An. 15 Geo. II. fing, in Places where no Privateer was ever heard of, are set down as Cruizers: That the mighty Fleet sent out in November, under the Command of two Admirals, a Fleet which filled the World with Expectations, and seemed designed to decide the Fate of Nations, was in this List declared to have been fitted out against Spanish Privateers.

That the Portugal Fleet was detained near twelve Months by evident Misconduct, in which Time the French introduced their Woollen Manusactures; the Dusch sent two Men of War to carry Gold from Liston; and an English Packet with 15000 l. in Gold Coin being taken, and the rest in Danger, the French have set up a Packet between Liston and Havere de Grace to share in this Gold Traffick.

That one Commander took 27 Ships under his Convoy from Lisbon, but brought none into England; and that a Master of a Ship introduced by several Merchants, with his Complaint of being deserted by his Convoy, was refused to be heard.

That the Commander of the Tartar fuffered the Spaniards to seize three Ships out of sour under his Convoy; and when the Pharnix, which was to protect the Trade of North Carolina, was known by the Admiralty to want Repairs, they ordered the other Ship off the same Station, and so left the Colony intirely naked.

That the Abuse of the Practice of impressing was such as could not be recollected without Horror.

That when the Misconduct of Officers has been complained of, no Answer had been returned, but, What would you bave done with this Captain, avoild you have him eurn'd out, and the Master of a Merchantman put in his Room?

That when the Coast has been represented defenceless, no Guard has been ordered; when the Law has been openly and contemptuously violated, no Redress has been obtained; when the Destruction of our Trade was mentioned, they were told by one of the Commissioners, It is your own War, and you must take it for your Pains.

*He concluded with addressing himself to the Committee in the following Terms: *To whom then could we appeal for Relief, but to you, the Redressors of Grievances, and Guardinass of the Publick? Could we have Recourse to those, who had treated our Missortunes with Indisference and Scorn, and who had openly declar'd themselves to be a Board of Execution only, and not of Order? Debate on the Supply.

Sir,

· I never trouble you long, Sir, on any Occasion; I Mr Philips. shall be very short upon this. I suppose, it is understood, if we go now into a Committee of Supply, it is in order to vote an Army; and I beg Leave to submit it to Gentlemens Judgments, whether Matters are yet ripe for fuch a Vote. It was the Custom of our wife Ancestors first to redress Grievances, and then to grant Supplies; and if their Example had been followed in succeeding Parliaments, we should not have heard of the Complaints that are now before us from our Merchants: Let us therefore now revive the long depressed Spirit of true Englishmen, and not be blindly led to make Grants before we make Inquiries. 'The Hon. Gentleman who moved you Yesterday to go into a Committee of Supply *, was pleased to say, ' The Business of the Nation had been long postpon'd:' I beg Leave to ask that Honourable Gentleman, does he think the great Business of the Nation is to grant Supplies only? Surely, Sir, I hope we are met here for other Purposes too: The granting Supplies, tho' necessary, is always laying a Burthen upon the Nation: The redressing Grievances is always falutary and pleafing. Shall we grant Men and Money, at a Time Complaints are made of Misapplications of Men and Money, without first inquiring into the Grounds of those

'The King calls to us for Advice, the Ministry call to us for Men and Money: Who are we first to answer? Why does the King call to us for Advice? That we may consider the State of Assairs, and know what Men and what Money to grant. Shall we then implicitely grant Men and Money, without first considering what Men and what Money it will be proper and necessary to grant? Is this Parliamentary? Can we judge of that Necessity, till we consider the State of the Nation, and the Situation we are in with Regard to Foreign Assairs? Surely no. I am as much for granting the necessary Supplies of the Government as any Gentleman in this House; but I cannot answer it to my Constituents to vote for them, till I am thoroughly satisfy'd of the Necessity of them, and that they will be better applied than the 5,267,000 l. granted last Year.

I hope therefore, Sir, we shall defer the Supply till we have been in a Committee of the whole House, to consider of the State of the Nation, which was a Measure proposed by an Honourable Gentleman over-against me, very early in the Session *, and will, I hope, be pushed.

Sir William Yonge spoke next.

Sir Will, Yonge.

Sir We have heard so often, and upon so many Occasions. of the Custom of our Ancestors, that I must begin with wishing, we would in this Age observe the Custom of our Ancestors, in all our Proceedings in this House. They never opposed a just and wise Government in any of its Meafures, nor did they ever talk of redressing Grievances, but when fome fuch really existed. When this happened to be the Case, they did not leave People in the Dark, or the Government to guess what they meant: They explained particularly every Grievance they thought the People laboured under, and they proposed what they thought the most proper and speedy Remedies. Under a wise Government, this could never interfere with the granting of the necessary Supplies, because such a Government will certainly, if they can, redress every Grievance, as soon as they are properly informed of it; and if they cannot without a new Law, they will as certainly concur in the passing of a proper Law for that Purpose. The Redress of Grievances therefore never could. nor ever was with our Ancestors a Cause for postponing the necessary Supplies, but under an unjust or unwise Government, that would neither redrefs, nor concur in redreffing those those Grievances, which were particularly explain'd, and An. 15. Geo.II. declar'd to be such by a Majority of the Representatives of the People. Nay, our Ancestors were upon this Head so moderate, that after they had particularly set forth the Grievances of the People, and had remonstrated against them in the strongest Terms, they seldom or never, in the same Session, refused granting the Supplies necessary upon that Occasion: After they had done their Duty in laying before the Government the Grievances of the People, they trusted to the Government for redressing them, at least till next Session; and then indeed, if they found the Government had made no Step towards that End, they had good Reason in the next Session to insist upon an immediate Redress of those Grievances they had before complained of, previous to their granting any Supplies.

' This, Sir, was the Custom of our Ancestors, the uniform Cultom of our Ancestors, I believe, from the first Original of our Constitution, quite down to the Revolution. From that Time indeed we have had, and now in particular we have a Party amongst us, who talk every Session of Grievances, and of redressing Grievances before granting Supplies, without ever fo much as once explaining to us any one Grievance they defire to be redressed. For my Part, I do not know any one Grievance the People are now exposed to; for I am fure no honest and loval Subject will ever look upon those Taxes as a Grievance, which are necessary for the Security of our Government, or for paying off the Interest and Principal of those Debts which were contracted for defending us against Popery and arbitrary Power. Those Taxes, indeed, afford a Handle which the Dilaffected have always endeavoured to make use of, for rendering the People discontented. They dare not avow, that the only Grievance they feel, is the Continuance of our present happy Establishment; but they exclaim against those publick Burdens, which have been made necessary by their Designs to subvert our Constitution, and to which most of them owe the Religion they profess, and all of them the Security they now enjoy, as to their Lives, their Liberties, and their Proper-

I am far from supposing, Sir, that any Gentleman in this House, is to be ranked among this Sort of People: The Oaths we have taken make such a Supposition impossible, or at least very uncharitable; but I am asraid, many Gentlemen, both within Doors and without, thro' not attending to the Dangers our Government has frequently, and from Time to Time, been exposed to, have allowed themselves to be missed by the specious Arguments, cumingly infinuated

An. 15. Geo. II. infinuated by this Sort of People. They represent all the Dangers our Government has been lately exposed to as imaginary: They, indeed, have Reason to do so; because those Dangers have been all owing to their Machinations, either abroad or at home; and from this false Gloss they put upon those Dangers, they conclude, that our Ministers have suggested them with no other View, than to put the Publick to an extraordinary Expence, that they might have an Opportunity to enrich themselves out of the Spoils of the People. This is specious, but not true; yet false as it is, it has, I fear, imposed upon many well-meaning Men without Doors, and not a few within. The same Sort of People represent the Power of the Crown as excessive, and by much too great to be confident with the Liberties of a free People; tho', in reality, it is no greater than is absolutely necessary for preserving us against the rebellious or seditious Practices of those, who, should they succeed in their Defigns, would neither leave the Face of Liberty, nor the Face of true Religion amongst us. This, I know, has likewise imposed upon many well-meaning Gentlemen, and has made them look upon some Parts of our present Constitution as Grievances, which are absolutely necessary for preferving us against the greatest of all Grievances, and that which would be the Source of every other Grievance a free People can apprehend, I mean, the Overthrow of our prefent happy Establishment.

' I hope, Gentlemen will confider of these Things, when they hear Grievances thus generally talk'd of in this House, before they resolve to postpone Supplies till we have redreffed Grievances which nobody knows of. I know of nothing that has as yet been declared a Grievance by a Majority of this House. Surely, before we can redress any Grievance, we must know what it is we are to redress, we must resolve that it is a Grievance which ought to be redressed. But our present Grievances, it seems, are of a very extraordinary Nature: They are such as cannot be discovered or explained, till we have refolved ourselves into a Committee of the whole House to consider of the State of the Nation. This, Sir, is really formething like a Lady in the Vapours: She is in a very bad State of Health: She fancies herself oppressed with several Distempers; but she cannot tell what they are, till the has had a Confultation of Physicians, to find them out, and explain them. The Confequence generally is, that these Physicians, in order to make themselves her necessary and expensive Attendants, suggest to her Fancy Diseases she never selt, and make her swallow Pills and Bolus's till they throw her into a real Distemper,

I wish, Sir, this may not be our Case: I wish this may An. 15 Geo. II. not be the Confequence of our refolving ourselves into such a Committee; however, I shall not determine myself to be against it, till I hear what Reasons may be offered for our going into that Committee; but fince it has been fo long delayed, I am surprised to hear Gentlemen pretend, that our not having been in such a Committee is a Reason for our poliponing the Supplies; especially now that it is so late in the Year as well as in the Season. If they think our going into such a Committee necessary, why did not they move it sooner? Could they expect that such a Motion would be made by those who do not think any such Motion necessary? From fuch a Behaviour one would really suspect, that they delayed making this Motion, on purpose to have a Pretence for possponing the Supplies. I hope this is not the Case: I am persuaded it is not. They could not hope for Success in any such Project; for, in my Opinion, no Man who confiders the Danger Europe as well as this Nation is in at present, will upon any Consideration postpone the granting of those Supplies, which are necessary, not only for the Support of our Government, but for enabling his Majelly to take speedy and effectual Measures for preserving a Balance of Power in Europe.

When I reflect, Sir, upon the dangerous, I may fay desperate Situation, the Balance of Power is now in, and the consequential Danger this Nation must of course be in: When I reflect upon the precarious Situation our Trade and Navigation both in the Mediterranean and American Seas, nay, I may fay in every Part of the World, must be reduced to, unless we can force Spain to give up that unjust Pretence for searching and seizing our Ships, even in Time of Peace, on Account of contraband Goods: When I reflect upon the wife Measures his Majetty has already taken, or is now pursuing, for redeeming Europe, as well as this Nation, from such a dangerous Situation : I fay, when I reflect upon these Things, I cannot but be altonished, that any Gentleman should propose the postponing of the necessary Supplies, till we have redressed Grievances. which are so little selt, that they have not as yet been discovered, or at least have not as yet been declared to be such by any Resolution of either House of Parliament.

Let us consider, Sir, the formidable Consederacy against the House of Austria, and the present forson Condition of that House. The Queen of Hungary has shewn a most surprising Spirit in her Distress: Her Subjects have done Wonders in her and their own Desence; but the Consederacy is so powerful, that she cannot resist it another Campaign; nor can we by ourselves alone give her such Assistance as will

Vol. XIII.

An. 15. Geo. 11. be effectual. Some of the Princes in the Confederacy must be drawn off, and a new Confederacy formed for her Support. Neither of these can be done without Money, nor can it be done at all, if it is not speedily done. Now, Sir, suppose France should succeed in all her ambitious Projects both in Germany and Italy: Suppose she should establish her Vice-Emperor upon the Imperial Throne, reduce the Queen of Hungary to her Terms, and establish her Son-in-Law, Don Philip of Spain, in a new-creeted Kingdom in Italy, what are we then to expect, Sir? Can we expect a happy Issue of our War with Spain? Must we not submit to any Terms France shall please to prescribe? If we do not, she will, by her Orders, or her Influence, bring all Europe upon our Backs; and after the bravest, the most obstinate Defence we can make, we must at last submit to what Terms our Enemies shall please to propose. The Freedom of our Trade and Navigation would certainly be the first Sacrifice to this fatal Event; and our Independency, our Religion, our Liberties and Properties would as certainly be the last; for as to our Lives, it would then be the Interest of France, tho' not our own, to preferve them as much, as it is the Interest of a Master to preserve the Lives of his Slaves. These are Events which I think of with Horror, and therefore I cannot agree to postpone any Thing that may prevent them. I hope the House will be of my Opinion, and, consequently, refuse to postpone any longer granting the necesfary Supplies, for the fake of redressing Grievances, which are neither felt by the People, declared by this House, nor explained or particularly let forth by those that talk of them.

Sir Watkin Williams Wynne. Sir Watkin Williams Wynne spoke to the following Effect.

' I shall readily agree with the Hon. Gentleman who fpoke last, that our Ancestors never opposed, or, at least, that they never ought to have opposed a just and wife Government in any of its Measures, nor ought they to have talked of redressing Grievances but when some such really existed; but I should be glad, that Gentleman, or any Gentleman, would shew me a Government, that did not assume to itself the great Character of being just and wife. or that would admit any Thing to be a Grievance which they had no Inclination to redrefs. Pius, Felix, Inclytus. were Characters assumed by the most cruel, the most brutish of the Roman Tyrants, as well as the most just and glorious of their Emperors; and those great Characters were more profusely bellowed by the flavish Roman Senate upon the former, than ever they were upon the latter. In this House, Sir, we ought never to talk of the Government, because it AND REAL PROPERTY AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY AND is the King's; but we may talk of the Administration, we An. 15. Geo. II. may censure it, without any Incroachment upon our Constitution. It is often our Duty to do so, and I will say, that no Administration had ever less Title to be called just and wise, than that which this Nation has been under for twenty Years past; so that the Behaviour of our Ancestors under a just and wise Administration, can be no Rule for our Conduct at present, nor any Argument against what my

Hon. Friend has proposed.

" We ought upon this Occasion to consider, what was the Conduct of our Ancestors, when real Grievances not only existed, but were generally and loudly complained of by the People, which is our Case at present. In all such Cases, we shall find it to have been the constant Practice of our Ancestors to begin with an Inquiry into our Grievances, and to infift upon their being redreffed, or upon having proper Bills pass'd for that Purpose, before they granted any Supplies; and this they have done even when the Nation was in the utmost foreign Danger. The memorable Instance in the Reign of Richard the Ild never can, never ought to be forgot by a British House of Commons. The French had then prepared for a most formidable Invasion upon England: They had a great Army affembled: They had Transports ready for that Army: They had a naval Force which we could not, which we did not, pretend to oppose at Sea; and all this within a Day's Sail of the Mouth of the River Thames. In this Condition we were, when the Parliament affembled, which that King had called for granting him the Supplies necessary for maintaining the Army he had prepared, and that Army was then, for want of Money, living at free Quarters round the City of London. In such a dangerous, in such a terrible Situation, what did the Parliament do? Did they grant the necessary Supplies? No, Sir. The first Thing they did was to present an Address to his Majesty, to remove the Lord High Treasurer. and the Lord High Chancellor, from his Councils and Prefence; and that all those through whose Hands the publick Money had passed, might be called to a strict Account. That King, by the Advice of these guilty Counsellors, returned a most haughty Answer, and order'd them, in an imperious Stile, to grant the Supplies he demanded; but this had a quite contrary Effect: It made the other House join with this in a Message to the King, that they would proceed to no Business, till his Ministers were punished according to their Deferts. The King was at last forced to comply: The Ministers were removed and punished; and the two Houses joined in appointing fourteen Commissioners to examine the publick Accounts, and to take Care of the 1741. publick An. 15. Geo. II. publick Affairs, in the Name and with the Confent of the King.

I shall mention another Instance of a much fresher Date. Before the * Revolution it had been found by Experience that the long Continuance of one and the same Parliament was a Grievance of the most dangerous Consequence to our Constitution. At the Time of the Revolution sufficient Care was not taken to remove this Grievance; and, therefore, the Parliament very foon refolved to supply that Defect. So early as in the Year + 1692, the famous Triennial Bill was brought in, and passed both Houses, but K. William, tho' he came here to secure and establish our Liberties, was so ill advised as to refuse it the Royal Assent. This made the Commons resolve, as soon as they met in November 1694, to have this Bill passed both Houses, and assented to by the King, before they granted any Supplies; and, accordingly, the very first Thing they did, was to order a Bill to be brought t in For the frequent meeting and calling of Parliaments, which was accordingly brought in the 22d of that Month, and received the Royal Assent the 22d of the next. We all know, Sir, what a dangerous Situation Europe in general, as well as this Nation in particular, was in at that Time. We were engaged in a heavy War, upon the Success of which the Liberties of Europe depended : We had a very numerous disaffected Party at home, who were continually forming Plots, and encouraging the French to invade us; fo that our Religion, Liberties, and Independency, in a great Measure, depended upon the Parliament's granting the necessary Supplies for carrying on the War; yet in these Circumstances this House insisted upon the Triennial Bill's being previously passed into a Law; and it was lucky they did so, for if they had not taken that Opportunity, when the Dutch were in so much Danger, we should probably have had no fuch Bill during that Reign, nor perhaps, to this very Day. It would have been lucky for the Nation, had the Parliament at that Time infifted as strenuously upon the other Bill, which had been resused the Royal Assent in the preceding Session, I mean the Bill Touching free and impartial Proceedings in Parliament; for the the Necessity of fome and 1694, in which an exact Account is given of this whole Affair, with the King's Reafons for his first Refusal.

This Bill was brought in by Robert Harley, Elq; afterwards Earl of Oxford.

MILL SOME LABOUR

One of the Compliments paid to King Charles II. not long after his. Restoration, was the Repeal of the Triennial Act, which was introduced with a most Courtly Preamble, as appears in TIMBERLAND's History of the House of Lords, Vol. 1. p. 67. † See Chandler's History of the House of Commons, Anno 1692, fome fuch Bill for fecuring the Independency of Parliament An. 15. Geo. II. is now too apparent; yet, I am afraid, it is out of our Power 1741-to make use of the same Method for obtaining it.

'Thus, Sir, if we follow the Steps of our Ancestors, no Danger, no Inconvenience, will ever be thought a prevailing Argument for our granting all the necessary Supplies before feeing any one publick Grievance redressed. I was surprised, Sir, to hear the Hon. Gentleman fay, that the Party who talk of redressing Grievances before granting Supplies, have never yet explained any one Grievance they defire to be redreffed. The bad Conduct of our Ministers, and their Profusion of publick Money, have been often set in a clear Light in this House, and are loudly complained of by all impartial and independent Men without Doors: The Septennial Act has been demonstrated * to be a Grievance of the most dangerous Confequence to our Constitution: The allowing of such a Number of Placemen, or any private Pensioners, to have Seats in this House, has been demonstrated to be a Grievance of the same Nature; and I could mention feveral other Grievances that have been fully and particularly explained, and have been exclaimed against not only by a great Party in this House, but by the whole Nation without Doors. I shall grant, that many of them have not as yet been declared to be Grievances by a Majority of the People's Representatives in Parliament, but they have been declared to be such by the general Voice of the Nation; and the Reason why the People's Representatives do not seem to be of the same Opinion with the People, is of all others the Grievance most fensibly felt, and most loudly complained of.

The Reason of this most surprising Difference in Opinion is generally supposed. Sir, to proceed from the Prevalence of Corruption, both at Elections and in Parliament. The Majority in Parliament has for a great many Years. been supposed to be biassed in their Opinions, or directed in their Declarations, by the Posts, Pensions, or Bribes, they possessed, received, or expected; and this is look'd upon by the whole Nation as the greatest Grievance, and as the Source of all our other Grievances: Nay, it has been often declared to be so by a Majority of this House. Pension and Place-Bills have often pailed through this House, and, confequently, we must allow, that Corruption has been declared to be a Grievance by a Majority of the People's Representatives in Parliament; and that it is a Grievance that has been felt and ought to be removed, or, at least, that it is a Grievance which may be felt and ought to be prevented. As this House, or at least the Majority of us, are as inde-

[•] See the Debate on a Motion for repealing it, in CHANDLER'S Hi-

An. 15. Geo. II. Purpose not only brought in, but approved of by every Branch of our Legislature.

As some farther Demands may probably be made upon as at the present Conjuncture, this may, perhaps, be a Reason with some Gentlemen for not deferring the Supply necessary for maintaining our Army. They may, perhaps, think that we shall hereafter have an Opportunity to insist upon a Redress of our Grievances, before we grant all the Supplies which our present Circumstances may render necessary; but besides its being a bad Precedent, I do not really see, Sir. how we can determine what Number of Troops may be necessary for the Service of the ensuing Year, till we have confidered the State of the Nation in a Grand Committee. The Affairs of Europe are, we know, in a very confused and dangerous Situation: We likewise know, that we stand engaged as Guarantees of the Pragmatick Sanction; but all the Powers now consederated against the Queen of Hungary, except the Duke of Bawaria alone, are engaged to guaranty that Settlement as well as we, and if we do not perform that Engagement, we cannot be accused of any Breach of Faith, because the Breach of Faith committed by the other Parties concerned, has made the Performance on our Part impossible, at least that Sort of Performance which consists in sending Troops to her Assistance. We may send her Money, and this Method of affilting her will, perhaps, be the best for her, and, I am fure, the most convenient for us. If this should be resolved on, and this, I think, is the only Thing that can be resolved on, unless we have an Assurance of being join'd by fome of the most considerable Powers upon the Continent, we ought to disband a great Many of the Troops we have now on Foot; for furely our War with Spain does not require our keeping up fuch a numerous Land-Army as we have at present, especially if no better Use should be made of it in Time to come, than has been in Time past. Therefore, till we consider the State of the Nation: Till we know what may be expected from the Dutch, and other Powers of Europe, equally, if not more concerned than we are, for preferving entire the Dominions of the House of Authria, it is impossible for us to determine what Number of Troops ought to be kept up for the enfuing Year: And our determining this Quellion, before we are duly prepared for that Purpole, will have a very had Effect upon the Minds of the People, because it will make them imagine, that this Parliament is to give Credit to, and to act upon the bare Affertions of Ministers, as implicitly as some late Parliaments have done, which would make them defiair of ever meeting with any Justice or Relief from Parliament; and no one can tell what fatal Effects the Despair of a brave People may produce.

I am very much surprised, Sir, to hear Gentlemen ask, An. 15. Geo. II. Why did you not go sooner into a Committee upon the State of the Nation? Why was it not moved for by those who think it necessary for us to go into such a Committee? Does not every one know how much our Time was taken up with Elections of very great Importance, till the very Day before our last Adjournment? If no fuch Adjournment, which was no Way expected, had happened, the Question would probably have been moved, and we should have been in a Committee upon that Affair before this Time. Therefore, those who think it proper we should consider the State of the Nation, before we determine what standing Army is necessary to keep up for the Service of the Nation, are not to be blamed for not having made any such Motion, but those only who were the Advisers of that Adjournment; nor can I see any Reason why such a Motion might not be made by some of those who are our Ministers, as well as by those who are not; for, in my Opinion, if we had a due Regard to the Dignity of our Proceedings, we ought, in every Sellion, to take the State of the Nation into our Confideration, before we grant any Supply, or, at least, before we make any particular Grants for that Purpole. According to our late Cuftom, the Ministers tell us what Number of Men they think necessary for the Land Service, and they give us an Estimate of the Charge: Upon this we go into the Committee of Supply, and there we agree to the Number, without inquiring whether so great a Number be necessary or no; we approve of the Estimate, many of us, I believe, without looking upon it, and we grant the Som Total at the End of it. Is this confident with the Dignity of Parliament? Does it not look like putting an implicit Faith in the Wildom and Integrity of our Ministers, who, I am sure, very seldom deferve so much Confidence? Is it not giving away the Money of our Constituents without knowing why or wherefore, tho' one of the chief Ends of fending us hither, is to take Care, that no more of their Money shall be granted for the publick Service, or any Branch of the publick Service, than is made appear to be absolutely necessary.

own Proceedings, and to that Character we ought to keep up among the People, the Custom should be revived and citablished, of taking the State of the Nation into our Consideration every Session of Parliament, before granting any particular Sums for the Supply; and I can see no Danger in putting off providing for our Army, for a Week or ten Days, that we may in the mean Time take the State of the Nation into our Consideration. I shall readily concur with Vol. XIII.

An. 15. Geo. 11, the Hon. Gentleman in admitting, that the Nation is in a most dangerous State; I think, it is in a most terrible Situation, with regard to Affairs both foreign and domestick. In the last two heavy Wars we spent above a Hundred Millions Sterling, we contracted above Fifty Millions of Debt, we loaded our People and our Trade with many heavy Taxes, in order to establish a System of Affairs in Europe, by which the Balance of Power might be preferred; and now after a Peace of thirty Years, with no one Interruption but what we brought upon ourselves, I may say, out of mere Wantonnels, we find the Nation loaded with very near the same Debt, our People still groaning under the same Taxes, our Trade ruined by that Debt and those Taxes, and the System of Affairs in Europe turned topsy-turvy; so that unless God Almighty interposes by some extraordinary Instance of his Providence, we must submit to see our most inveterate Enemy lording it over the Continent of Europe, and at last over ourselves; or we must engage in a new War as heavy, as dangerous, and perhaps, as tedious as the last; and when we feriously reslect, we have the Mortification to find, that all this has been chiefly owing to our own Conduct. This is, indeed, a most melancholy, a most dreadful Situation: We have been brought into it by our Parliament's taking every Thing upon Trust from our Ministers ; therefore, I hope, we shall do so no more. I hope we shall now consider first the State of the Nation; because from thence alone we can determine what Number of Troops ought to be kept up for the ensuing Year; for if there is no Appearance of our being able to form a proper Confedesacy upon the Continent, we ought to disband a great Part of our Troops we have now on foot, in order to be able to encrease our Naval Force; because it is upon that alone, after the Balance of Power upon the Continent is destroyed, that we must depend for the Continuance of our future Independency."

Refolutions of to the Army.

This Debate being over, the House resolved itself into a Grand Committee on the Supply, and came to the following Resolutions; viz. That a Number of Land Forces, for Guards, Garrisons, &c. for maintaining a Regiment of Foot raised in America, An. 15. Geo. II. for the Service of the West Indies, for 1742.

The same Day Major-General Anstruther * withdrew his Petition for Anstruther-Wester, &c. As did also Alexander Petitions for Antruther and Aberdeen, &c.

Feb. 22. Mr Philippan, from the Commissioners of the drawn. Navy, presented to the House the Account of the Number of Seamen, pursuant to their Order of the 28th ult. which was ordered to lie on the Table.

Ordered an Account of all Woollen Goods, exported from Several Accounts Great Britain, and to and from what Ports, from Christmas ordered, and Periods. to Christmas 1741, distinguishing each Year, with titions presented, the Value thereof: And an Account of all Wool and Wool relating to the Woollen-Yarn imported from Ireland into Great Britain, from Christmas 1729, to Christmas 1741 distinguishing each Year, to be laid before the House.

A Petition of the Mayor, &c. of Taunton: Also of the Master-Clothiers, &c. of Shepton-Mallet, in the County of Somerset, and of the Lord Mayor, &c. of the City of York, complaining of the Decay of the Woollen Manufacture, were referred to the Committee of the whole House.

Then Mr Phillips flood up, and moved that the Serjeant at Arms should go into the Court of Requests, &c. and summon the Members to attend, which was ordered accordingly; and he being return'd, Mr Scrope reported from the Committee on the Supply the foregoing Resolutions.

Hereupon Mr Phillips (poke to the following Effect: Mr Speaker,

And a not rife, Sir, to oppose any of the Resolutions that Mr Phillips's have been now read to you, but only to take Notice, that Speech on the when some of those Resolutions were agreed to in the Com-Resolutions remittee, I mean particularly those relating to the Marines, my, being reand the Regiment in America, the Committee was in so ported. great a Consusion and Disorder, that it was impossible for any Gentleman who was not close to the Table, to know what was doing. It is greatly for your Honour, Sir, that you never suffer any Question to be put, without keeping the House to the strictest Attention; and, I hope, that for the future, before Questions of this great Importance are put in the Committee, the Chairman will take Care to preserve the same Attention, that every Gentleman may have an Opportunity of giving his Dissent, as well as his Assent, and that nothing may be obtained by Surprize.

n, 15. Geo. II.

Now I am up, Sir, give me Leave to take Notice, that the Troops voted in the Committee, which are now to be agreed to by the House, amount in the whole to 50,867 Men, which is 815 more than were voted last Year; and those are exclusive of the Troops in the Plantations, Minorea, and Gibraltar, which are likewise on the English Establishment. You have thirteen Regiments, and fourteen Companies of Invalids there, which amount to above 11,700 Men; so that in the Whole you have in the British Pay, besides Foreigners, above 62,500 Landmen and 40,000 Seamen, which cost the Nation above 3,611,000 l. per Annum; and these are exclusive of Half-pay Officers: A large Number of Forces indeed, too great, I fear, for this Nation long to support; therefore, I hope, Sir, I trust from what the Hon. Gentleman over the Way faid in the Committee,* (and I repose great Confidence in what he does say) that these Troops will not only be kept up, but that they will be employed; and the Moment the Necessity of keeping them up ceases, that the Troops shall also cease, I mean all those that are not necessary for Guards and Garrisons at home. If this is done, the Nation will be convinced there is an Alteration of Measures as well as Men, and that the Troops were not kept up to awe the People into a davish Dependence on Men in Power at home, but to retrieve the almost lost Honour and Reputation of the Nation abroad; that they were not kept up to make fine Shews in Camps, and at Reviews, but to do the Nation real Service; that they were not kept up to influence Elections in England, but to restore the Balance of Power in Europe. These Considerations will make every Man chearfully contribute his Proportion to the Expence of them.

· Give me Leave to fay a Word more: When these: Supplies are granted, I hope, we shall all join Hand in Hand to make Inquiries, to redrefs Grievances, and to pass such wholesome Bills as may effectually put it out of the Power of any Ministry to mislead the King, to corrupt the Parliament, or to enflave the People. If these Measures are taken; and, I hope, these Measures will be taken, England will again rear its Head, the mutual Confidence that ought to subfish between the King and his Subjects will be restored, and the Spirits of the People, which have been long depreffed with the Weight of heavy Taxes, without any Prospect of Relief, will be revived, Trade and Manufactures will flourish, and we shall, indeed, be a new People. The Prospect of these Things, Sir, is greatly pleasing, and the more so, when we consider, that they are in our Power: Let us then then chearfully fet about this great Work, and England will An. 15. Geo. It. date the Æra of its Happiness from the glorious Session of 1741.

Sir

· Among the many important Duties of this House, there is not one, which, when faithfully discharged, can contribute more to the Good of our Country, and the Glory and Security of our Sovereign, than that of inquiring ilricity and impartially into the Conduct of those who are intrusted by the King with the executive Part of our Government. In all Countries, Sir, the real Interest of the King, and that of the People, depend so much upon one another, and are fo inseparably connected, that no King, even the most arbitrary, would ever neglect, or act in Opposition to the Intereft or Happiness of his People, it he were well advited, and well ferved by his Ministers; but as the private Views of Ministers are generally inconfishent with the true Interest of the People, they often by Flattery, or some other Alcans. prevail upon their Maller to acr in direct Opposition to his own Interest, as well as that of his People; or they encourage his Indolence, or divert his Attention, that they may 8741

An. 15. Geo. II. the more freely oppress those whom he is, both in Interest and Duty, obliged to protect. As Kings are generally befet by their Ministers, the Missortune is, that the King feldom hears of the Grievances or Complaints of the People, till by an Insurrection he is tumbled headlong from his Throne, or forced to secure it by the Massacre of great Numbers of his Subjects; but by our happy Constitution. the Sovereign of these Kingdoms is secure against this Misfortune, because by Means of this House, while it remains independent of Ministers, the King must hear of, and may in Time redress the Grievances of his People; and if any of his Ministers have been guilty of Misconduct, it will be discovered by a fair and an open Inquiry.

Thus, Sir, it must appear, that in Duty to our King as well as our Country, we ought to enquire often into the Conduct of his Ministers. This is our Duty at all Times, but it becomes more indispensably so, when the People appear generally diffatisfied with the Administration, and call aloud for an Inquiry into the Conduct of our publick Affairs. From this Introduction, Sir, it may be presumed, that I am to conclude what I have to fay, with a Motion for an Inquiry; but to shew, that this Inquiry ought to go as far back as I defign it should, I must beg Leave to make a few Remarks upon the Conduct of our Ministers for twenty Years past; and in order to obviate the common Objection, that our Measures have been all approved of by Parliament, I shall begin with observing, that it is, and miny be justly suspected, that during the Time I have mentioned, our Ministers have taken most unjustifiable Methods for gaining a corrnpt Influence, both at Elections and in Parliament. While our Constitution subsists in its full Force, it is cortain, that the Parliament, or at least this House of Parliament, will always be of the same Complexion with the Generality of the People. It is from this House his Majesty is to know the Sentiments as well as the Complaints of his People; therefore, when Measures generally disliked by the People, meet with an Approbation from this House, it may be justly suspected, that some illegal Methods have been taken for obtaining that Approbation; and if upon a new Election a Minister, who by his Crimes or Imprudence has rendered himself generally obnoxious to the People, should nevertheless get a Majority of his Friends, or rather Creatures, returned as Members of this House, we must suppose that some illegal Methods were taken for obtaining those

This Confideration alone, Sir, without any other Proofs, is sufficient to convince every impartial Man, that for twenty Years Years past an illegal Influence has prevailed both in Parlia- An. 15. Geo. II. ment and at Elections; for during that whole Time we have been governed by a Minister, who as soon as he got into the Administration, rendered himself unpopular, and who has every Year, fince that Time, increased that Unpopularity, by pursuing Measures both at home and abroad. which were inconsistent with our Constitution, or with the Honour and Interest of the Nation. It is very well known. Sir, what a Ferment was raised in the Nation by the Execution of the South-Sea Scheme in the Year 1720: * It is known, that the Ferment then raised was far from being allayed by the Measures taken, the Year following, for punishing the Guilty and restoring publick Credit. The Difcontents were fo great, that from his late Majesty's own Authority, in his Speech at the Beginning of the next Parliament, I can fay, they gave Hopes to the Disaffected amongst us, and encouraged them to enter into a Conspiracy for overturning our prefent happy Establishment. The Nation being in these Circumstances, one would have expected, from the Nature of our Constitution, that the new Parliament, which was fummoned in the Year 1722, would generally have confided of such as were no Friends to the Adminittration; but when the Parliament affembled; this House foon appeared to be of a ministerial, instead of being of a popular Complexion; from whence one must naturally, and, I think, necessarily conclude, that our Ministers had found Means to corrupt a Majority of our Elections; and this Conclusion is very much threngthened by the large Sums granted for paying off the Debts of the Civil Lift before, and foon after the chufing of that Parliament; for in the Year 1720, the Sum | of 300,000 l. was paid for this Purpose by the two Infarance Companies; in the Year 1721, 500,000 L. more was granted by Parliament + for the same Purpose, and in the Year 1725, I another Sum of 500,000 l.

Befides these large Sums, Sir, which were granted openly and expressly for paying off the Debts and Incumbrances of the Civil List; by a Clause artfully slipt into an Act of Parliament in the Year 1721, an annual Sum of above 56,000 l. was added to the Civil List; by ordering, that the old Pensions and Annuities charg'd upon the hereditary Revenues should, for the suture, be paid without being deemed to be Part of the 700,000 l. settled upon his late Majesly for his List; and in the Year 1725, the Sum of 101,800 l. was taken from the Sinking Fund, to complete his late Majesly's Civil List Revenue to 700,000 l. ser Ann. and soon after

"Thus, Sir, it appears, that in the last seven Years of his late Majesty's Reign, there was no less than 1,444,000 l. extraordinary Grants made to the Civil Lift, besides its being freed from the Payment of 36,000 !. yearly, which it was before charged with; and it is very remarkable, that in the Year 1720, the same Minister, who has ever since, I may fay, prefided in our Councils, forfook being a Country-Gentleman *, as he had before professed himself, and again begun to be a Minister of State. This, I say, very much Atrengthens the Conclusion, that in the Year 1722, when a new Parliament was chosen, the Minister had found Means to corrupt a Majority of our Elections; and this will answer for that Parliament's having made fuch extraordinary additional Grants to the Civil Lift, without having ever fo much as once enquired, in a proper Manner, into the Produce of the Civil List Revenue, or into the Management of those Revenues: It will likewise answer for that Parliament's having approved of the Treaty of Hanover, without appointing a Secret Committee to inquire into the Truth of the improbable Facts pretended as the Cause of that Treaty; and it will answer for the Minister's asking from, and that Parliamant's granting, an Addition of 120,000 l. per Ann. to the Civil List, during his present Majesty's Life.

I come now, Sir, to the second Parliament which was chosen under the same Minister's Influence. By the Conduct of our Minister, and the Compliance of the fast Parliament, it may be supposed, the Discontents of the People were no Way allayed: It is certain they were rather increased, when a new Parliament came necessarily to be chosen in the Year 1727. His present Majesty's happy and peaceable Accession to the Throne had, 'tis true, given great Joy to every good Subject; but that Joy had no Sort of Relation to the Ministers of the former Reign: On the contrary, it was very much increased by its being generally presumed, that the Ministers, or at least the chief Minister of the former Reign, would be dismissed and called to a strict Account; therefore it was to be expected, that the People would chose fuch Representatives as were well affected to his Majesty. but it was not to be expected, if they were left to a free and nucorrupted Choice, that they would generally chuse such as were known to be attached to the former Administration: Yet, nevertheless, it soon appeared, that such Men were generally chosen, which of itself is a strong Argument against this Parliament's being freely chosen, and this Argument receives additional Strength from the memorable extraordi-

The very same Administration being continued by his present Majesty (for the few new Members added have always been look'd on as Cyphers) and this new Parliament being likewife of a ministerial, instead of being of a popular Complexion, the Civil List, by this Means, got some new Acquisitions, during this Parliament; the vast Expences the Nation was put to in paying foreign Troops, for fecuring us against chimerical Dangers, were approved of; and the Treaty of Seville, by which a Foundation was laid for ruining the Houle of Austria, without gaining any one Advantage to this Nation, met with a parliamentary Approbation; and the Losses and Complaints of our Merchants. occasioned by the Spanish Depredations, both before and after that Treaty, met with no Regard from Parliament, at least none but what was, I may fay, dictated by our Ministers. Thus the Behaviour of this Parliament became, I think, a convincing Proof of the Methods by which it was chosen; and its continual Compliance gave our Minister, at last, the Courage to bring a Scheme into Parliament, which would at once have absolutely ruined our Constitution, by giving all future Ministers the Direction of most of our Elections. When I say this, Sir, I believe, every Gentleman, that hears me will suppose, I mean the Excise-Scheme which owed its Disappointment, not so much to the Virtue of this House, as to some noble Lords who not only perfuaded their Friends here to be against it, but would probably have prevented its being agreed to in their House, if it had been passed in this.

This most wicked and desperate Scheme, Sir, work'd the Discontents of the People almost into Madness. It raised such a Ferment in the Nation, that the Minister and his chief Supporters in this Scheme, were burnt in Effigy at many Places in the Kingdom; and as this happened in the Sammer 1733, one may easily judge, what Temper the People were in, with regard to our Ministers, the Summer following, when a general Election for a new Parliament came necessarily on; for no one can pretend, they had in the mean Time done any one Thing, either at Home or Abroad, for reconciling themselves to the People, but on the contrary, some Officers had been dismissed for no other Reaton, but their appearing against the Excise-Scheme; and several necessary and popular Motions had been rejected in the last Session of this Parliament by the Instituence of our Ministers.

See the Account of this Grant, as also the Names of the Members who voted for and against it, in CHANDLER'S Hist, Anno 1729.

An. 15.Geo. II.

In these Circumstances, Sir, can it be imagined, that the People, if left to a free and uncorrupted Choice, would return a Majority of those who were the professed Friends and Supporters of our Minister? Yet a Majority of such were returned as Members of this House, and some of them were rechosen at the very Places where they had, but the Year before, been burnt in Effigy. This Parliament accordingly behaved as the former two had done: They agreed to every Thing the Minister proposed: They approved of every Thing he did, Abroad and at Home; and they rejected every Motion, and every Bill, which he but feemed to diflike. They furnished Money for Fleets and Armies to assist the Emperor, and they also approved of our giving him no Assistance: They made a confiderable Addition to the Civil Lift, under Pretence of its suffering by the Gin-Act: * They took no. Notice of the delusive and provoking Treatment our Commissaries had met with in Spain, because our Minister seemed resolved to put up with any Thing rather than enter into a War: And to fum up all, they approved of the late Convention. From hence, Sir, I think, it must be presumed, that this Parliament was chosen by the same Sort of Influence the

- From hence, Sir, I think, it must be presumed, that this Parliament was chosen by the same Sort of Insluence the two former had been; and upon the Choice of this Parliament, I must make one Observation which ought to be taken particular Notice of. Some of the noble Lords who declared themselves openly against the Excise-Scheme, and persuaded their Friends in this House to Vote against it; were of the sixteen Peers for Scotland. And it is very remarkable, that not one of all those Peers † could get himself rechosen at the next Election, tho' they were of as good Families, and had as good Characters as any Lords in the Kingdom; and every one knows, they were turned out of every Office or Employment they held at the Pleafure of the Crown.
- Whether any corrupt Practices have been made Use of for influencing Gentlemen in their Way of voting, I shall not pretend to decide: I hope every Gentleman would disdain being so practised upon, and would resent the Attempt in a Gentleman-like Manner; but from what I have said, I hope, there will appear something more than a Presumption, that some such Practices have been made Use of at Elections for 20 Years past; and when we see Gentlemen turn'd out of honourable or lucrative Employments, for no other af- An. 15. Geo. II. fignable Reason, but because of their voting against ministerial Measures in Parliament, it must be allowed, that without any personal Threatenings, or even without a personal Application, it will have fome Influence upon those whose Subfiftence chiefly depends on the Employments they possess at the Pleasure of a Prime Minister. Therefore, I hope it will not be made Use of as an Objection to the Motion I am to make, that for thefe last twenty Years, Accounts have been regularly laid before, and all our Meafures approved of by Parliament. On the contrary, as there is so much Ground for Sulpicion of corrupt Practices having been made Use of. and as those Practices can be detected by nothing less than the Power and Authority of Parliament, this very Approbation becomes one of the strongest Reasons for a Parliamentary Inquiry.

After what I have faid, Sir, I think it unnecessary to enter into a particular Examination of the many Steps in the Conduct of our publick Affairs, that have given so great Disgull to the Nation; and for which no Reason could ever yet be affign'd that was fatisfactory, or so much as seem'd fatisfactory to those who neither possessed nor expected any Place under the Government. Some I have cutforily mentioned, and if, upon this Occasion, an Attempt should be made to justify any of them, I hope, the Arguments made Use of for that Purpose will be fully answered by those whose Sentiments are the same with mine. An impartial and strict Inquiry into the Conduct of our publick Affairs is what the whole Nation expects from this new Parliament; and therefore I shall conclude with moving, That a Committee be appointed to inquire into the Conduct of our Affairs at Home and Abroad, during the last Twenty Years.'

His Lordship was seconded by Sir John St Aubyn, to this Sir John St Aubyn.

Sir.

The Inquiry moved for by the Noble Lord, is so generally and so loudly called for by the People without Dours, and it is what we have in former Parliaments been so often provoked to by those within, who have had for many Years the Direction of our publick Affairs, that I can suggest to myself but one Reason for its being now opposed by those very Men, who have formerly thrown out Defiances, and provoked us to inquire into their Conduct. In former Parliaments, when they threw out those Desiances, they were well affured of having a great Majority of their Friends in the House, and consequently of having such Gentlemen name

Vol. XIII U

An. 15. Geo. II. ed to be of the Secret Committee, as would follow their Directions in the Inquiry they were to make; and from fuch an Inquiry they could fear no Danger, even tho' the Evidence of their Guilt had been as clear as the Sun at Noon-Day.

- That this, Sir, would be the Confequence they knew by Experience, because they had had a Proof of it in the Affair relating to the Frauds of the Customs, which was brought under the Consideration of the House by the famous Excise-Scheme; for the Reason given for putting that insufferable Yoke upon the Necks of the People was, the many Frauds committed in the Customs. These Frauds our Ministers said were entirely owing to the Artifice and Cunning of our Merchants and Shop keepers; and that it was impossible to prevent or put a Stop to them, any other Way than by turning all the confiderable Branches of our Customs into an Excise. On the other Hand, our Merchants infifted, that most of the Frauds in our Customs were owing to the Misconduct, Neglect or Connivance in the Officers, and that they might be almost entirely prevented by some proper Regulations, and by having a watchful Eye over the Conduct of our Custom-House Officers.
- 'This, I say, Sir, our Merchants insisted on. They not only infifted upon it, but they went farther. They got their Friends in the House to move for an Inquiry into the Frands of the Customs; and our Ministers having set those Frauds in such a hideous Light, could not avoid consenting to such an Inquiry; but what was the Consequence? As they had a great Majority in the House, the Commissioners of the Treaury, * and a few more of their own particular Friends, were put upon this select Committee of Inquiry. That is to fay, the Gentlemen who have the Nomination, both of the Commissioners and Officers of the Customs, and are. consequently, answerable for their Conduct, were appointed to inquire into and detect their Misconduct, without any Indemnification to those Smugglers that should come to give Evidence against a Commissioner or Officer, or to any inferior Officer that should come to give Evidence against his Superior. Upon the Appointment of such a Committee, the Merchants despaired of any Success, therefore they resolved to give themselves no Trouble; and the Inquiry ended, as every one expected it would, in a Justification of all the Commissioners and Officers of our Customs.

' This

^{*} See the Names of the faid Committee, every one of whom voted for the Excise-Scheme; as also of those Members who were proposed on the other Side, with the Numbers on the Ballot for each, in CHANDLER's History, Anno 6. Geo. II. 1733. P. 375.

This was a most certain Proof to our Ministers, that An. 15 Geo. II. they could never be in any Danger from an Inquiry into 1741 their Conduct, as long as they had so great a Majority in Parliament; and accordingly, from henceforth, they began to be more frequent, and more prefumptuous in throwing out their Defiances than they had ever been before. But the Case is now altered: The Majority of this House feems to confilt of fuch as will not approve of their Conduct, unless they find it merits their Approbation; therefore, if a felect Committee of Inquiry be appointed, it will probably confist of such Gentlemen as will make it their Business to inquire firicily and impartially; and this may, perhaps, be a Reason for their endeavouring now to prevent, what they have so often provok'd; but if they do, it will be a stronger Argument for the Motion, than any I can think of in its Favour, and therefore I shall add no more, but conclude with feconding what the Noble Lord has proposed.

Sir Charles Wager * opposed the Motion.
Mr Speaker,

Sir Cha. Wager.

The Honourable Gentleman who spoke last, has suggested such a Reason for opposing this Motion, as, I believe, he thinks, will make Gentlemen ashamed to oppose it; and, indeed, if I were upon this Question to determine myself by the Regard I have for the Administration, and without any Regard to my Country, or to the Dignity of this House, I should be far from opposing it: On the contrary, I should, before now, have taken an Opportunity to make some such Motion, for the very Reason suggested why some Gentlemen should be against it: I mean, because I am convinced, that a proper Committee would be appointed, and that that Committee would inquire in the strictest and most impartial Manner. This, I am fure, is what every one, who has the Honour of being employed by his Majesty, most heartily wishes for, and they have all Reason to do so, because it would put an End to all those Calumnies, which by some People, for what Reason may be easily guessed at, have been so artfully invented, and so industriously spread against them.

For this Reason, Sir, if I were to lay aside all Regard for my Country, as well as the Regard I have for the Dignity of this House, I should most heartily concur in any Motion for an Inquiry into the Conduct of our publick Assairs; because I am not only a Friend to those employed in the Administration, but have the Honour to have some small Share in it. But the true Interest of my Country, and the real Dignity of this House, shall always, with me, outweigh U 2 cvery

An. 15. Geo.II. every private or personal Confideration; and therefore, let Gentlemen think what they will, I must be against an Inquiry which I think unnecessary, or at a Time when I think it would be dangerous; because an unnecessary Laquiry I take to be inconfistent with the Dignity of this House, and an Inquiry, at fuch a critical Conjuncture as the prefent, would certainly be of the most dangerous Consequence to the Nation. A Minister may be calumniated, and may have most glaring Falshoods propagated against him. Was there ever a Minister that had not? But when the Charge against him is known to be false, would it be consistent with the Dignity of this House to take up our Time with and Inquiry into his Conduct, merely for the Sake of vindicating his Character? Suppose we had Reason to think that the Charge against him was not altogether groundless, would it be prudent or right in us to divert ourselves with an inquiry into his Conduct, at a Time when the very Being of the Nation was at Stake, and when the Preservation of our Country required our closest Attention?

"Upon both these Accounts, Sir, I must be against the Inquiry proposed. I do not think there is the least Truth in the Stories that have been propagated, nor the least Foundation for any Charge that has been brought against the Administration in general, or against any particular Man concerned in it. They are all, indeed, without any Proof, or they are of such a Nature as I cannot think criminal; because they relate to the Measures pursued by the Administration, all or most of which I have, as a Member of this House, approved of, because at the Time they were respectively transacted I thought them right. And if any of them should now appear to have been wrong, which I am far from being convinced of, I must impute the Error to the Weakness of human Wisdom, and not to any criminal Intention in those that advised or pursued them. Section 1

'This, Sir, is my Way of thinking, and while I think so, I must look upon an Inquiry into the Conduct of our publick Affairs as absolutely unnecessary, and consequently. inconsistent with the Dignity of this House. But suppose I thought otherwise: Suppose I thought some of our Ministers had, through Weakness or Wickedness, misled the Crown, or that they had been guilty of illegal Practices: in : the Execution of what was committed to their Care by the Crown, I should be far from thinking the present a proper Time for enquiring into and punishing their Misdemeanors; because, however guilty they might be, the Nation could not fuffer by a Delay of Justice, whereas it might suffer, perhaps be undone, by calling great Offenders to an Account, at a Crisis more important and more dangerous to this Na-An. 15. Geo. II.
tion, than any our History families us with an Account of.

The Power of this House is, 'tis true, vastly extensive: I hope, it will always be superior to the Power of any Offender whatsoever; but great as it is, we cannot exert it against Offenders in high Stations, without taking up a great deal of our Time, and raising a mighty Bustle in the Nation, the Consequence of which, with regard to our domestick Quiet, no Man can pretend to foresee or determine. Therefore, however much we may have suffered by the wicked Advice or illegal Practices of great Offenders, we should take a proper Time to inquire into and punish their Missoings; for we ought not certainly to expose ourselves to the Danger of any domestick Disturbance, when we are in the greatest and most imminent foreign Danger, which every Gentleman must allow to be our Case at present.'

Mr Phillips spoke next to the Effect as follows:

Mr Phillips.

I am surprised to hear the Motion made by the noble Lord opposed by any Gentleman in this House: A Motion sounded in Justice, supported by Precedent, and warranted by Necessity. Not only Justice to the Nation, but Justice to those that have been in the Administration, calls for an Inquiry, that every Man's Actions may speak for him, and that Censure may be confined to those only that have deserved it. Surely no innocent Man can be under any Apprehensions from the strictest Examination of his Conduct:

Those Fears attend the Guilty only.

The Hon. Gentleman feems to think an Inquiry unneceffary. I beg Leave to ask, will any Gentleman in this House undertake to defend the Measures that have been purfued for twenty Years past? Will any Gentleman say, that the wretched Condition we are in, is the Effect of Chance only? Shall there be the least Suspicion of Milmanagement, and a British House of Commons not inquire into it? How much more at a Time when the Nation is reduced to the last Extremity, by corrupt, weak, and pufillanimous Meafores? Shall the Fatality that has attended every Step of our Conduct for so many Years past, infect this House also, and throw us into a Lethargy? Surely, no. The Voice of the Nation calls for an Inquiry: Our Credit abroad cannot be supported without it; and the Reputation of every Man in this House is nearly concerned in it. In vain shall we attempt to retrieve our lost Honour by pursuing new Meaforce, if we do not first centure and punish the Authors of the old: In vain thail we attempt to gain Allies, and to convince

Ap. 15. Geo. II. convince them that we are in carnel in the Profecution of the War against our Enemies abroad, unless we first call those to an Account, that have been their secret Abertors and Encouragers at home.

If ever there was a Cause for an Inquiry into past Transactions, it is now. Have not large Sums of Money been raifed in Times of Peace, and no Debts paid; large Armies raised in Times of War, and no Services performed? Have we not negotiated ourselves out of all our Allies, and all our Credit? Treaty after Treaty, Convention after: Convention, and what did these all end in but War? How has that War been conducted? Why, shamefully, seandalously, to the Encouragement of the Enemy and the Dishonour of the Nation: Large Fleets fitted out to fight the Seas only, and return fhattered and torn, to Spithead, while the Enemy were every Day seizing our Ships for want of Crainers and Convoys, and neighbouring Nations taking this Advantage to supplant us in Trade. A gallant Admiral was indeed fent to the West-Indies, but sent too late, and not supported when there: Another was fent to the Mediterranean, but with what Intent I know not, unless it was to cover an Embarkation of Spanish Troops for Italy.

Shall a Britith House of Commons not inquire into the Causes of these Things? They must: They will, Sire or forfeit all the Reputation they have hitherto gained. And if These are to be inquired into, what better Method than by a Select Committee to be chosen by Ballot? It is a Parliamentary Method that has been attended with good Consequences to the Nation, but fatal ones, indeed, to those that have made an Abuse of Power; and 'tis unaccountable to me, that any others but fuch, or those that have a Mind to screen them, should make an Opposition to it. For my own Part, if it was the Case of my Brother, if he was innocent, I should think this the properest Method to make that Innocence appear; and if he was guilty, I should think it the greatest Crime in me, to endeavour to screen him from National Justice, therefore, I am most heartily for the Question.

Mr Henry Fox.

Mr Henry Fox * spoke to the following Purpose: . Mr Speaker,

When I confider the present Circumstances of this Nation and of Europe: When I reflect, that we are now engaged in open War with one of the most potent Kingdoms in Europe, upon the Event of which both our Trade and Navigation depend: When I reflect that Europe is now engaged in a War, upon the Event of which its Liberty depends, and An. 15: Geo. II. by which it will probably be enflaved, unless we interpose with the Utmost of our Strength, I cannot but be of Opinion, I think every Man most, that Union amongst ourselves was never more necessary than it is at this important Criss: And therefore, I am not a little surprised to hear a Proposition seriously made, and vigorously supported in this House, which must necessarily not only revive all our former Divisions, but create new ones amongst us, and excite more violent Animostries than any that have appeared in this Kingdom for many Years.

That this, Sir, would be the Effect of a general Inquiry into the Conduct of our publick Affairs for fo many Years palt, we must suppose from the Experience of all former Inquiries; and as the Inquiry now proposed is more general. and comprehends a longer Time, than any fuch Inquiry ever did, this Effect will not only be the more certain but the more fatal. Nay that this will be the Effect must appear from the very Nature of the Charge, upon which the Motion is founded; for the Charge confilts chiefly, not in Facts or Practices that must be admitted to be Crimes, but in Allegations that the Measures we have been pursuing were wrong, notwithstanding their having been all authorised or approved of by Parliament. Must not this of Course revive all our former Disputes about the Fitness or Unfitness of those Measures? And when the Condemnation or Acquital of Men in high Stations depends upon the Fate of the Question. must not those Disputes be carried on with greater Animosity, I may fay with greater Fury than ever they were before? One Part of the Charge, indeed, I shall admit to be criminal. To apply the publick Money towards corrupting the Members of this House, or the Voters at any Election. must by all Men be allowed to be a Crime; but it is pleasant to observe, how the Advocates for this Motion attempt to prove this Part of their Charge. With regard to the Meafures that have been approved of by Parliament, they first suppose that those Measures were apparently wrong; and their Inference from thence is, that therefore the Members must have been under a corrupt Influence, otherwise such Measures could not have met with an Approbation in Parliament. Then with regard to Elections, they first suppose that the Majority of the Electors were diffatished with the Mensures of the Administration, and would consequently have fent up diffatished Representatives, if they had been left to a free and uncorrupted Choice; but as they did not do fo, therefore the Electors were certainly under a corrupt Influence. This is all the Proof they have hitherto offered,

An. 15. Geo. II. and will any Gentleman fay, this Sort of Proof ought to be confidered by this House as a sufficient Ground for an In-

Questions in Politics, Sir, are of such a Nature that they seldom or never admit of a Demonstration; and, confequently, in Countries where the People are allowed to speak their Minds, they will always be of different Sentiments with regard to these sort of Questions. For this Reason, Gentlemen should not be so uncharitable as to suppose, that every Man who differs from them in Opinion is corrupt, or that he forms his Judgment from any Thing but the Conviction of his Conscience; and therefore, a Parliament's having approved of any Measure I thought wrong, shall never by me be thought a Proof of its being under any Sort of corrupt Influence: Consequently what they have offered, cannot be admitted as a Proof, even by those who are convinced that the Measures pursued by the Administration were apparently wrong, and much less by those who are convinced that those Measures were right.

Now, Sir, with regard to Elections: They fay, our Elections must have been under a corrupt Influence, because the Representatives were not of the same Complexion with the Majority of their Constituents. Here likewise the Proof they offer is a downright begging the Question. That there have been, are now, and always will be some Men without Doors, as well as within, who disapprove of the Measures purfued by our Government, I do not in the least question ; but that a Majority of the better Sort of People are so, or have lately been fo, I cannot admit. Great Endeavours, great Artifice, and great Industry, have, I know, been lately used to impose upon and make them so; and those Endeavours may upon feveral Occasions have had some Effect upon the giddy Mob; but our Elections, thank God! do not depend upon such People. They are generally governed by Men of Fortune and Understanding; and of such our Ministers, for this twenty Years past, have been so happy as to have a Majority in their Favour. Therefore, when we talk of People with regard to Elections, we ought to think only of those of the better Sort, without comprehending the Mob or mere Dregs of the People; for an Election may be free and uncorrupted tho' these appear against it, but would be very far from being free, if the Electors were intimidated and compelled to vote as directed by a tumultuous Mob of low People; and by them only it was, that any Member of this House was burnt in Estigy on Account of the late Excise-Scheme; consequently, tho' that Member was rechosen at the same Place for a new Parliament, we are not to conclude, that his Election proceeded from An. 15. Geo. II.

Bribery or Corruption, because, perhaps, no one of those who affisted at burning him in Effigy had any Vote, Interest, or

. Having thus shewn, Sir, that the Charge upon which this Motion is founded, confifts of Allegations of Facts which are not admitted to be criminal, or of criminal Facts unsupported by any Proof, I must next observe, that, I believe, you cannot find upon your Journals a Precedent for entering into a Parliamentary Inquiry, unless where Measures had been pursued that were admitted by a great Majority of the House, as well as the Nation, to be criminal, or unless some criminal Practices were alledged that were notoriously known to have been committed, or fuch as the Member who moved for the Inquiry undertook to prove. The general Inquiry that was fet on Foot in the Year 1715, was founded upon Measures that were apparently criminal, and such as were thought to be so by a great Majority of that House of Commons. A most glorious War had been put an End to by a most infamous Peace: Our Allies had been deserted, if not betrayed: A most destructive Treaty of Commerce had been concluded with France; and when we might have prescribed Terms to our Enemies, our Ministers, from some selfish, if not criminal Views of their own, submitted to receive Terms from them. These were such Measures as almost every Man condemned, except those that were concerned in advising them, or carrying them on; and therefore they furnished the Parliament with a just Foundation for an Inquiry; but of late Years, I am fure, no fuch Measures have been pursued, nor any Measures that can, or, I believe, will be condemned by a great Majority of this House of Commons. Therefore, we can now have no Pretence for fetting up an Inquiry, unless some particular criminal Facts should be alledged and offered to be proved; and even in this Case, we could have no Pretence for a general Inquiry: We could inquire only into the particular Facts complained of, which would take up much less of our Time, and give less Disturbance to the Nation, than a general Inquiry into the Conduct of our publick Affairs for twenty Years past.

Such a general Inquiry, with such a long Retrospect, is without Precedent, and would be a most dangerous Precedent. If such an Inquiry should be agreed to, and a Committee appointed for that Purpose, it would be of Course institled on, that all Papers of State, even those of the most secret Nature, should be laid before them; and, indeed, they could not make their Inquiry compleat without having all such Papers. Our Committees appointed upon such Occasi-

Vot. XIII X

THE PARTY AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY.

An. 15. Geo. II, ons are, I know, called Secret Committees; but how juffly. Experience may shew; for few important Secrets have long remain'd fo, after being once laid before such a Committee; and the Nature of the Thing speaks itself, for when a Secret is committed to a great Number of Perfons, every one of them becomes the less careful of concealing it, because when it is discovered, it is not easy to fix the Discovery upon any one of them. Therefore if such a Precedent were once made, we could never hope to keep any Secret, nor would any Foreign State, or any Foreigner of Consequence. ever enter into any fecret Transaction with our Government: because he could not know, but that the Secret might, twenty Years afterwards, be discovered by a Parliamentary Inquiry with a twenty Years Retrospect.

But befides being a dangerous Precedent, Sir, the fetting up such an Inquiry at this Juncture might, nay, probably would, be attended with the most fatal Consequences, both with respect to our War against Spain, and with refpect to our Negotiations for preferving a Balance of Power in Europe. As we have for some Time been carrying on a War against Spain, it is not to be doubted but our Ministers have had some secret Intelligence from thence: Our very News Papers tell us that the Court of Spain have discovered a Plot for delivering the Groyne into their Hands; and tho' that Plot has been discovered, yet we may from thence prefume, that our Ministers have still a secret Correspondence in Spain: Would it not be of the most fatal Consequence to have that Intelligence, or that Correspondence discovered? And can any one answer for its being kept concealed, after being exposed to a Secret Committee of this House, and all the Secretaries and Clerks that must necessarily be employed by them. We must likewise suppose, that several Schemes have been laid before our Ministers for attacking the Spaniards, both in Europe and America, and some of those Schemes may probably be such as ought to be carried into Execution; would it be prudent in us, to run the Risk of having all or any of those Schemes discovered to the Enemy? And yet this Risk we must run, if the present Motion should be agreed to.

Then, Sir, with regard to our Negotiations: As the Flames of War have been above a Twelvemonth fince kindled in Germany: As there is a most powerful Confederacy formed against the House of Austria, we must suppose, that our Court have been carrying on Negotiations for drawing some of the Powers off from that Confederacy, and for forming a Counter-Confederacy in Favour of the Queen of Hungary. In all such Cases, as every Court in Europe has its own particular Views and Interests, the Negotiations must be of An. 15. Geo. II. a most secret Nature: Arguments must be made use of, and Memorials delivered at one Court, which it would be most fatal to have discovered to another; and as all those Transactions are yet in Embrio, can we defire, that his Majesty should lay the Whole before a Committee of this House? Can we suppose it to be consistent with his Honour to do so, when we must suppose, that he has, at least with some of those Courts, eagaged to keep the Transaction so secret as not to communicate it to any but to some of his chief Ministers of State?

'Upon the Whole, Sir, I can see no Occasion we have for the Inquiry proposed; and if I did, I think it impossible, in our present Circumstances, to carry it on with Effect. This is my sincere Opinion; and as I can see no Danger or Inconvenience in delaying it for a Year or two, in which Time our own Tranquility, as well as the Tranquility of Europe, may, perhaps, be re-established, and all those grand Affairs which are now in Agitation sinally ended, I must therefore be against the Motion, and I hope the noble Lord, when he considers those Things, will agree to have it withdrawn.

Mr Cornewall.

I do not get up, as presuming to think any Thing that I shall offer can inforce a Question of this Importance. But as this Question tends to an Inquiry into those Measures, which, in the universal Opinion of Mankind, have been thought so destructive to this Nation, an Opinion which, tho in my private Sentiments I have ever joined in, yet, as I have never had an Opportunity of giving my publick Tetimony against them, I cannot now refrain from expressing my Satisfaction at seeing the Time come, when they will be thoroughly sisted; and it is with Joy I look on myself as now going to give a Pledge to the Publick, that I shall ever look upon bad Measures with equal Detestation.

The People of England, reduced almost to a State of Despondency from the ruinous Conduct hitherto pursued for many Years past, have placed their only and last Hopes in the Independence, Justice, and Firmness of this Parliament: It is from this Confidence that every honest Man in the Kingdom now chearfully submits to the Burden we are necessitated to impose on them; as they expect to see Freedom and Happiness secured to them at Home, and national Honour retrieved Abroad.—But as these Hopes can only be answered by an Alteration of those Measures that have occasioned their Distress and Complaints, how bassled will X 2

An 15 Goods, they think themselves in their Expectations, should the Motion that has been made to you, be rejected in this House? How ill an Earnest would it be, that we intended an Alteration of Measures, should we decline an Inquiry into those that have been so cried out against? Could they possibly suppose it to be from any other Motive than an Apprehenfion, let we might lay a Foundation for condemning our own future Conduct, by countenancing an Inquiry into that of others, which is passed?

But, Sir, whether the universal Complaint of past Meafures be the Effect of Artifice and Milrepresentation (as might be pretended) on a weak and deluded People, or springs from the real Grievances of an injured and right-discerning one, I say, which soever be the Case, surely it is a Deference, an Indulgence at least, which in Decency, in Duty, it becomes this House to shew the collective Body of the People of Great Britain, by giving them that Satisfaction which a thorough Disquisition into the Subjects of Complaint, only can, and only ought to give them.

And therefore, for God's Sake! let every Gentleman reflect on the Consequences that will attend your Determination in the Affair before you. Is the Screening a few publick Delinquents from Inquiry, to be put in Balance with the giving Repose to the disturbed Minds of the whole

People of three Kingdoms?

Inquiry is the Criterion of publick Virtue: It may, like Ithuriel's Spear, detect a Devil, however disguised in the Shape of an Angel, but can never obscure the Brightnels of Truth. If Measures have been right, they will stand justified by it, and the People of England will rest, fatisfied: If they have been iniquitous, the People expect Jullice on whomsoever the Guilt falls, and wheresoever it may extend itself. It is not a narrow personal Inquiry that is aimed at, meanly confined to this or that Offender, but an Inquiry into Offences, wherefoever they shall be found, that becomes the Dignity of this House.

I shall not take up your Time so unnecessarily, as to enter into a particular Disquisition of those Measures that call for this Inquiry, which have been to often and to well exposed, and which speak more strongly their own Guilt. than the most powerful Eloquence can point out. Unexperienced as I am in Matters of a publick Nature, I should think it no difficult Task, to run through a Deduction of our publick Mismanagement, both at Home and Abroad, too gross not to be the Objects of common Discernment, and some Instances perhaps that have not come within the Noen tice of the general Complaint. But I should think such a minute

Motion is most justly founded on the general Face of Things, and not to be diverted by giving room for a Debate on Particulars, the proper Subject of future Consideration. And, Sir, was it only from what you heard the other Day at your Bar, and the Resolutions this House came into in Consequence of it, the Expediency of the present Motion would be fufficiently inforced.

We have grouned under an Administration that have not only taken every Step to destroy our own Liberties at Home, but have made us acceffary in subverting, at least indangering all the Liberties of Europe; who have made the British Name the Contempt of its Enemies, and loft the Confidence of those, whom Parity of Interest should make us consider as our Friends: An Administration whose Influence has diffused Neglect, Abuse, and Corruption into every the most minute Branch of our domestick Occonomy; for there is hardly an Office in the Kingdom, from the lowest to the highest, that does not call aloud for Parliamentary Inquiry: An Administration that, when it durst no longer withstand the united Voice of a justly enraged People, closed itself, in some Part, with the highest, the most provoking Strains of Infolence, that ever were dared to be offered to any Nation under the Sun in our Circumstances, by making the most distinguish'd Instruments of the most detelled Measures triumph, by their Exaltation over the Injuries and Resentment of the whole British Nation.

But, Sir, it is the future good Consequences that will attend this Inquiry, and the Examples arising from it, that prevail with me, over all other Considerations: I have no doubt of seeing a Reformation of Measures for some Time: Who, that looks round this Assembly, can doubt it, as long as it subsists thus constituted? A wise and honest Parliament will always make those in the Direction of Assairs so too. But all these Things have their Periods, whereas Examples are of perpetual Security.

We are now, Sir, in a Situation, both as to our foreign and domestick Assairs, which points out Union as the only Means that can make us a glorious and happy People, and found the Throne of this Royal Family, which every Man of common Sense and Honesty must wish for, on that never to be shaken Basis, the undivided Hearts of the People. And, Thanks be to God! the pleasing Prospect already opens itself, by the substiding of those unfortunate Distinctions that have been artfully somented, in a general Zeal for promoting the true Interest of our King, and the Good of our Country

An. 15. Geo. II. Country: A Prospect that must give inexpressible Joy to all 1741. Lovers of both, and Mortification to none but those, who are wicked enough to prollitute the Name of this Family to ferve the infamous Views of their own felfish Policy. National Union can only be brought about by giving national Satisfaction; and I look upon the Step we are now taking as perfectly contributory to that End. True Union can only fubfift amongst honest Men: All other Union is amusive, and destructive of itself.

> The Union I am speaking of is indissoluble, and should the Dregs of Faction, whom the falfely affumed Denomination of a Party only made confiderable, attempt to interrupt it, they would only discover their own Infignificancy, and add to the Contempt and Detellation the Publick had of them.

As for the Method proposed by this Motion, it is the only one by which a publick Inquiry can be carried on properly, or with Success. The Impropriety of laying all Papers before the House, has been often allowed on all Hands, and every Man knows how easy it is to obstruct or perplex an Inquiry so extended as this is, if carried on before so numerous an Affembly. But this is so obvious to any Man who means getting at Truth, that I need only fay, that I confider all Arguments against this Method, as Objections raised only because it is practicable. For my own Part, as I consider this Question, as tending to restore Satisfaction to the Nation, Credit and Popularity to the Government at Home, and Weight and Dignity to it Abroad; and as it tends to the Honour of this House, I am heartily for it.'

Lord Percival.

Lord Percival Spoke next.

. I should act a very inconsistent Part, If I did not support the Motion now under your Confideration, with the fame Zeal with which I concurred in that made some few Days after I had the Honour of taking my Seat in this House; Nothing, Sir, has happened, nothing, Sir, can happen to all ter my Opinion in this Respect, that the Publick have a Right, that is a Duty incumbent upon us to inquire Arialy into the Conduct of the late Administration.

' It was then my Opinion, that we had Grounds fufficient to induce us to that Inquiry: The general Voice of the Nation, the almost desperate Condition of our Affairs, both Abroad and at Home, then rendered the Inquiry highly necessary: The Presumption was strong, that the Interest of the Nation had been betrayed; and I thought I should have abused the Confidence reposed in me by my Country, if I had not endeavoured to discover in what Manner, in what An. 15. Geo. If.
Instances, and by whom it was betrayed.

But these Reasons for Inquiry are infinitely stronger now than then; we had Reason to inquire then from the Suspicions of the Publick, and from our own Suspicions. These Reasons still subsist; and to these are added the Suspicions of the King himself! To these are added the visible Opinion of our Allies Abroad.

The King has at length dismissed his Minister, and he has dismissed him without any Application from this House to that Purpose.—He has done it of his own Motion.—His Mujesty has dismissed a Minister who had served him many Years, and, as we are well convinced, against the Inclination of that Minister. Had his Majesty believed, that he had served him saithfully, who can imagine, that he would have turned him out of his Service? We must therefore conclude, that his Majesty's Opinion has concurred with the Opinion of the Nation, with the Opinion of those in this House, who expressed Suspicions of his Conduct.

Our Allies abroad have visibly proved by their late Measures, that they entertained the same Suspicions. A general Indolence feemed to have feized on all the Powers joined in common Interest with us: Their Resolutions were as languid, their Conduct equally tame and despicable, in the general Danger of Europe, as the Councils of this Nation. We were told, that this Infatuation abroad was the Caufe of our weak and pufillanimous Meafures at home. But it is now discovered, that our Conduct was not influenced by their Measures, but that their Measures were influenced by our Conduct. The Moment that this Minister was divested of his Power, the Charm was at once dispelled: The Dutch. notwithstanding all the dilatory Forms of that Government. proceeded to a vast Augmentation of their Forces. The King of Sardinia has determined to take Part in the common Cause; and it is apparent, that from the Removal of this Minister, the Spirit of the Grand Alliance has happily revived, as much as it was once fatally depressed by the Removal of the great Duke of Marlborough.

This happy Event demands our Attention; it has opened a Prospect of Preservation to the Balance of Power, of which we had lost all View before. If we do not seize this happy Moment, how can we answer for it to ourselves, to our Country, to Posserity? But unless we engage with Vigour in this Inquiry, how can we hope to avail ourselves of this Event? Does any Man imagine, that it is a Change of Men that has given this new Life to the Counsels of our Allies? No, Sir, it the Considence that a Change of Mea-

An. 15. Geo. II. sures will be the Consequence of a Change of Men: And such a Considence must perish in its very Birth, if an Inquiry into the Errors of the past Administration should be stifled in this House.

Sir, to extricate this Nation, or to extricate Europe out of that Labyrinth of Dangers in which we are all involved, it is necessary that the present Administration should be supported by the Spirit and Inclinations of the People. The Confidence which is necessary to give them Weight Abroad, is equally necessary to enable to raise the vast Supplies at Home, which the critical Condition of our Interest demands. This Confidence in them can never be attained, but by a vigorous Profecution of this Inquiry. The Publick have some Distrust, that the new Administration are slack and tender in this Respect: In my own Breast I have none: I am happy in this Change, which has fallen in favour of those for whom I have entertained the highest Esteem, and for fome of whom I have a fingular and fincere Friendship. But, Sir, we must pay some Regard to the Opinions of the Publick, as well as to our own, and they will never be convinced, that the new Ministers mean well, if this Inquiry should be defeated here: They will interpret the Coldness of this House to a Disposition in the Administration to protect and screen, which must in the End produce the worst Effects, both to the Publick and to them. And therefore, as a Friend to my Country, and as a real Friend to them, I shall follow this Inquiry as far I am able to purfue it.

'Sir, I shall trouble the House very little farther at this Time, but I must observe with great Submission, that I think all Arguments that are used to prevent, or to delay the present Inquiry, are very indecent and disrespectful to this House; for they bear this inevitable Construction, that this House is actuated more by Passion and Prejudice, than by Impartiality and Justice. No Man can have the Considence to affert, no Man can mean, that if the late Minister deferves the Censure of Parliament, he should not receive it: They can therefore mean nothing, but that they think him innocent, and think, that if we enter into this Inquiry, this House is determined to pronounce him guilty, whether he be fo or no.

In private Life, what Man of common Sense would dismis a Steward after a Service of twenty Years (during which his Accounts had never been inspected) without a careful Examination, before he gave him a Discharge? The Publick stand in the same Light with regard to this Minister, and the Publick will want common Sense in this Instance, as a private Man would do in the other, if they suffer this Minis Minister to retire unquestioned, laden with Honours and an An. 15. Geo. II. immense Wealth, far exceeding what the just and known 1741.

Profits of his past Employments would have furnished.

Mr Henry Pelbam spoke to this Effect:

Mr H. Pelham.

' It would very much shorten our Debates, upon this and every other Occasion, if Gentlemen would consider attentively the Subject of the Debate, and keep close to the Argument, without running out into Harangues or Flowers of Eloquence, which may be made use of upon any other Subject, as well as that which happens then to be under the Confideration of the House. That we have a Right to inquire into the Conduct of our publick Affairs, and that upon certain Occasions we ought to inquire, are Questions that have nothing to do in this Debate, because they are such as no Gentleman will deny. The only Questions now under our Consideration must therefore be, whether we have now any Occasion for making such Inquiry, and if we have, whether we ought now, or in this Session of Parliament, to enter upon that Inquiry. With regard to the first of these two Questions, I hope it will not be said, that we ought every Session of Parliament, or once in every certain Number or Term of Years, to appoint a Secret and Select Committee for inquiring into the Conduct of our publick Affairs from the Time of the last Parliamentary Inquiry. This we can no Way pretend to, either from Custom or Reason; for it is certain, that the Custom has always been, not to set up a Parliamentary Inquiry, unless when great Crimes were known, or strongly suspected to have been committed; or unless when such Measures were pursued as were allowed to have been weak or wicked. This, I fay, has always hitherto been the Cultom, and Reafon must convince us that it is just; and that it would be wrong in us to fet up a Parliamentary Inquiry, when there is no well-grounded Suspicion of Misconduct; for as such Inquiries must always be dangerous and troublesome, they ought never to be entered into without an apparent Necessity.

Taking it therefore for granted, Sir, that no Parliamentary Inquiry ought to be fet up, unless when there appears to be a well-grounded Suspicion of Misconduct, I shall observe that this Suspicion ought to be such a one as prevails in this House; and if this Observation be just, it must be wrong to talk, upon any such Occasion, of the Voice of the People, or the Voice of the Nation. Sir, the Voice of this House is the Voice of the People, the Voice of the British Nation. It must always be understood to be so; for there is no other way of determining what is the Voice of the Nation. If we Vote. XIII.

Ap. 15. Geo. II. were to form a Judgment of this from what we heard without Doors, every Man's Judgment would be according to the Sort of Company he usually conversed with. In a free Country the Measures of the Government in general, and even every particular Measure, will be canvassed by the People without Doors, and will be condemned by some and applauded by others. A Gentleman who keeps Company with the former will from thence judge, that the Voice of the People is against the Government; and one who keeps Company with the latter will, for the same Reason, judge, that the Voice of the People is in Favour of the Government; confequently one of those Gentlemen would be for an Inquiry. and the other against it, for one and the same Reason; therefore, when such a Question happens to be started in this House, no Gentleman ought to consider what is the Voice of the People without Doors, nor ought he to allow what he has heard without Doors, in the least, to enter his Thoughts: If he does, he can hardly avoid being prejudiced by the Company he has kept, and such a Man can never be a good Judge in fuch a Question.

' What then, Sir, are we to do? How are we to judge upon such Occasions? The Answer is easy: Every Gentleman ought to consider by himself the Measures pursued by the Government. If a general Inquiry be moved for he ought to confider, or, perhaps, reconfider by himself, all the Measures that have been pursued by the Government during the Time proposed to be inquired into: If upon such an Examination he finds Reason to conclude, that they have been generally wrong, he ought then to agree to the Inquiry proposed: But if he finds Reason to conclude, that they were generally right, he ought to be against it: Nay, even when he finds Region to condemn any one or two particular Meafures, he ought to be against a general Inquiry ; because after that Question is rejected, he may himself propose a particular Inquiry, into the Affair he finds Reason to condemn or at least suspect, and that Question may be agreed to by the House, notwithstanding our having rejected the former. But in fuch Cases I must observe, that according to the usual Custom of Parliament, we ought first by a proper Question to condemn the Measure, before we put any Question for inquiring into the Authors, or the Conduct of the Authors of any particular Measure.

' Now, Sir, as the present Question is for a general Inquiry, and for a longer Time, I believe, than ever any former Inquiry was proposed to extend to, it will appear from what I have faid, that every particular Gentleman must enter into the Examination of all the Measures pursued by our GovernGovernment during that long Period; and therefore, I hope, An. 14 Goo. IL. it will not be thought impertinent in me to enter into that Examination, or to endeavour to justify our publicle Measures, especially such of them as have been particularly objected to in this Debate; and here I must previously obferve, that in all fuch Cafes we ought not to form our Judgment from the Light in which any past Measures now appear to us, but from the Light in which it did probably appear when it was at first resolved on; for considering the narrow Limits of human Wifdom or Knowledge, and the Shortness of human Forelight, future Incidents may often make a publick Measure appear to be wrong, tho' according to all human Appearance, it appeared at first to be right.

After having made this previous Observation, I must fay, Sir, I am surprised to hear any Fault now found with the Measures that were taken for punishing the Guilty, and refloring publick Credit, after the violent Shock it received from the wicked Execution of the fatal South-Sea Scheme in the Year 1720; because future Incidents have been so far from condemning any of those Measures, that the immediate Revival of publick Credit, and the flourshing State it has been in ever fince, has fully demonstrated, that those Meafures were wife as well as just. As to the Guilty, they were all punished. They were not, perhaps, punished for feverely as the Sufferers expected and defired; for is is natural for Men that have been injured, in the first Violence of their Resentment, to defire a Punishment more severe than common Justice can admit of; but they were all punished so feverely, that when the first Violence of publick Resentment was over, the Punishment began to be thought too severe, and was therefore, by Way of Ridicule, called Justice by the Lump.

The next Measure of a Domestick Nature that seems to be objected to, is the Money granted from Time to Time to. the Civil Lift, and the Additions that have been made to that Revenue. If there was any Crime in this, Sir, I must really think it lies more properly at our own Door, than at the Door of any Minister, or of the Administration in general; and therefore, before we agree to this Question, we orgat, I think, to amend it, by refolving, That a Committee be appointed to inquire into the Conduct of our Affairs at Home and Abroad, and into the Conduct of the House of Commons, during the last Twenty Years. But as none of those Grants were made, without having proper Estimates and Accounts laid before the House, and as from those Estimates and Accounts the Necessity of those Grants were made appear, we can have no Reason to find Fault Y 2 11751 -

An. 15. Geo. II, either with our Ministers for asking, or with the House of Commons for granting any of the Sums of Money, or Additions that were made to the Civil Lift. And, indeed, if we confider, that there are many accidental Charges which fall upon the Civil Lift Revenue, and many Articles which rife higher than that at which they were first estimated, we cannot be furprised, that in the late King's Time it became necessary, from Time to Time, to grant a Sum for paying off the Debts of the Civil Lift, or that his present Majetty's Ministers should defire to have an Addition made to it at his Accession to the Throne.

The Excise-Scheme is another Affair of a Domestick Nature, that feems to have been particularly objected to in this Debate. I know, Sir, that great Art and Industry was made Use of to make People believe, that this Scheme was intended as an Introduction to a general Excise, and that it was a Preliminary to a formed Design for destroying our Constitution, and making Slaves of us all. But as I had at that Time, and have had ever fince, a Friendship and Intimacy with those who approved of that Scheme, and introduc'd it into this House, I know the Falshood of those Infinuations. However I shall not defire Gentlemen to take my Word for it. I shall only defire Gentlemen to have a little Charity, and to judge of other Men's Actions and Intentions, as they would defire others to judge of their owns If they do this, they will not ascribe any Action to a wicked Motive, when an upright one can, with more Probability, be affigned; and this is evidently the Cafe with Regard to the Excise-Scheme. I hope it will be granted, that to prevent Frauds in the Collection of the publick Taxes, and thereby increase the publick Revenue, is as upright, and even as laudable a Defign as any Man can entertain; and, I believe, it will likewife be granted, that the Excise Scheme, had it been passed into a Law, would have had this Essect 4 at least it must be granted, that it was very reasonable to presume it would have had this Effect, from the Experience we had before had of the Effect of raising the Duty upon Coffee, Tea and Chocolate, by Way of Excise upon the Confumption, inflead of raifing them by the Method of Cufroms upon the Importation, and allowing those Customs to be drawn back upon the Exportation. This then was one Motive for approving of, and introducing the Excife-Scheme, which must be allowed to have been an upright one; but on the other Hand it is faid, that this Scheme would have overturned our Constitution, and cstablished arbitrary Power, by giving Ministers an uncontroulable Influence at all Elections. That it would have had fuch an Effect I flill very much - state a messale service at estimate quellion a question; and as our Ministers had no Experience of this in An.15. Geo. II.

any parallel Case, they could not therefore be so certain of this Essect as of the other: Consequently it is more probable, that their approving of, and introducing that Scheme proceeded from a good Intention, than that it proceeded from a wicked one; and I am sure it is much more charitable, and more like a Christian, to suppose it proceeded from the former, than to suppose it proceeded from the let their Design be what it will, their throwing it up so easily as they did, was some Sort of Atonement, and induced most People to pardon the Attempt, which was the true Cause of the next general Election's going so much in their Favour; and it ought, I think, to be a Reason for its being never again mentioned in this House, especially as the Nation no Ways suffered by the Attempt.

Thefe, I think, Sir, are all the Measures of a Domeflick Nature for 20 Years past, that have been objected to in this Debate, and if Objections could have been raifed against any other, I believe, they would have been mentioned. Then with regard to Affairs of a Foreign Nature, the Treaby of Hanover is, I find, by those Gentlemen always made the Burden of their Song, and the original Ground of all their Complaints; and in order to make this Treaty liable to any Objection, they who cannot know, exprelly contradict what his late Majesty, who could, and certainly did know, affirmed, in his Speech * the next Selfion of Parliament, declaring expressly, that the Negociations and Engagements. entered into by some Foreign Powers, which seemed to have laid the Foundation of new Troubles and Diffurbances in Europe, and to threaten his Subjects with the Lofs of the most advantageous Branches of their Trade, obliged him, without any Loss of Time, to conclude that Treaty. It was then well known, what those Engagements were: They, in Part, appeared even from the publick Treaty: The Spamiards were resolved to wrest Gibraltar and Minorca from us: The Emperor was resolved to support his Oftend Company in foite of us. For these Purposes they were to askit each other; and the King of Spain, as a farther Recompence, granted the Emperor's Subjects such Liberties and Privileges in both the Indies, as were inconsistent with our Commerce. and with the Treaties subfilting between Spain and us. These were their Engagements, and if we did not submit. the Emperor was to attack his Majesty's Foreign Dominions. whill Spain was to make a Diversion by invading these Kingdoms in Favour of the Pretender. The Court of Viwent even so far as to threaten his late Majesty with

An. 15. Geo. II. both these Attacks, before he entered into that Negociation. which concluded with the Treaty of Hanover.

Thele are Facts, Sir, which are founded upon the Testimony of our late Sovereign; I am fure, a much stronger Tellimony than the Averment to the contrary of any private Gentleman: And these Facts will for ever justify the Treaty of Hanover, and all the Mensures we took consequent to that Treaty, especially when we consider, that by those Measures we not only prevented the Dangers wherewith we were threatened, but obliged the Emperor to give up his Oftend Company, and Spain to confirm our Right to Gibraltar and Minorca, and to recede from her Engagements in Favour of the Emperor's Subjects with respect to Trade; both which she did by the Treaty of Seville; and therefore I am surprised to hear that Treaty found fault with. We did not, 'tis true, by that Treaty, obtain immediate Satiffaction or Reparation for all the Damage the had done our Trade, because it was impossible to compute and afcertain that Damage; but we obtained a Promife for immediate Reparation as to some Part, and as to what remained, it was to be fettled and adjusted by Commissaries mutually to be appointed, who were to finish their Commission within the Space of three Years. If Spain afterwards refused to perform her Engagements, or rather delayed the Performance under frivolous Pretences, for the never expressly refused. it was what our Ministers could not forefee nor provide against for without trulling to some Promises to be performed in future, it is impossible to negotiate or conclude any Treaty whatfoever.

But, Sir. with regard to Spain's Performance of thefe Promises, and with regard to the Depredations afterwards committed by the Spanish Guarda Costa's, our Ministers cannot jully be accused of any Neglect; as may appear from the many Memorials, Letters and Papers relating to those Affairs, which have, from Time to Time, been laid upon our Table: They never ceased making Application; the Spanish Ministers never ceased promising. It our Ministers were thy of beginning Hostilities, as long as they had any Hopes of obtaining Reparation by fair Means, are they to blame? Are the Ministers of a trading Nation ever to blame in such a Case? Sir, their Shyness in this Respect, especially with regard to Spain, ought to be the Ground of Applause rather than Inquiry: And in future Ages, when Time has put an End to Envy, which, thank God! is not fo longliv'd as Truth, it will appear to be for

I now come, Sir, to confider our Behaviour when the War broke out between France and the Emperor in the Year

1733 : In that War we had certainly no Concern or Interest, An. 15. Geo. II. any farther than as it might affect the Balance of Power in Europe; and with regard to the Guaranty of the Pragmatick Sanction, we were let free from that Engagement, by the Emperor's having brought the War upon himfelf; We had therefore no Concern, nor any Obligation to enter, either as Principals or Auxiliaries, into that War; but as. by its Event, it might affect the Balance of Power, we were therefore in Prudence obliged to augment our Forces. both by Sea and Land, in order to be ready to put a Stop to the Arms of the victorious Side, in Case their Ambition should lead them to push their Conquests farther than was confident with the Balance of Power in Europe. If we had delayed our Preparations till this Event had actually bappened, we should then have been too late: The Vanguished would have been obliged to submit, before we could have come to their Relief. Therefore, I still think, it was the most prudent Part we could act, to stand neuter at the Beginning of that War, but to prepare for the worst; and our Allies the Dutch, whose Wisdom some Gentlemen take all Occasions to extol, held the very same Conduct: Nay, they went farther; they actually agreed to a Treaty of Neutrality, and yet notwithstanding that Agreement, they augmented their Forces, in order to be ready at all Events. By this Conduct we put ourselves but to a very small Expence. and yet that Expence had as good an Effect, as if we had put ourselves to as much greater and brought ourselves into much greater Danger, by engaging as Parties in the War. The Parliament was therefore in the right to approve of those Measures; their having done so can be no Argument of their having been chosen or governed by a corrupt Influence; nor can those Measures, or the Approbation they then met with, now afford any reasonable Ground for a Parliamentary Inquiry.

The only remaining Measure that has been objected to in this Debate, and therefore the last I shall take Notice of is the Convention with Spain, which was founded upon a Maxim I must still approve of, because it is such a one, as I hope, will always be held facred by those who have the Administration of our publick Affairs, I mean that of never engaging us in a War, especially with Spain, as long as there is the least Reason to hope for obtaining Redress by peaceable Means. By that Treaty the King of Spain acknowledged the Injuries that had been done us, and promised to make Satisfaction, by paying a certain Sum here at London in the Space of four Months: This was such a Proof of that Court's being in Earness, and farmly resolved to do us Justice, that our

Ministers

An. 15. Geo. II. Ministers, upon the Maxim I have mentioned, could not but agree to it; and as we were neither to promise nor give up any Thing by that Treaty, they had the more Reason to accept what the Court of Spain offered. If the Court of Spain delayed performing that Engagement, as they had done their former, our agreeing to this Treaty could occasion no Delay in beginning Hostilities, but what would have been otherways occasioned by the Season of the Year; and their Failing in the Performance of such a solemn and explicit Stipulation, would of courfe render them blameable in the Eyes of all Europe; which, considering the Intricacy of the other Disputes between the two Nations, was a Point our Ministers were in the right to aim at, and has, perhaps, been the principal Cause of Spain's remaining hitherto unassisted by any Power in Europe. This Measure, therefore, or the Approbation it met with in Parliament, can as little afford a just Cause for an Inquiry, as any other that has been mentioned in this Debate; and thence, I hope, it will appear, that we have at present no solid Ground for an Inquiry, from the supposed Weakness or Wickedness of any of our late Meafures.

> ' If a Minister, or an Administration, are to be compared to the Steward of an Estate, we shall from thence find as little Reason for an Inquiry; nay, upon this Principle, it would be unjust in us to call them now to a general Account. If the Steward of an Estate passes his Accounts regularly. and delivers up his Vouchers every Year, and accordingly receives an annual Discharge or Release, it would be most unjust in his Lord to expect or defire, that after twenty Years Service he should be brought to a general Account, as if no fuch annual Account had ever been delivered or approved of. This is exactly the Case of our Administration; they have regularly every Year delivered in their Accounts; those Accounts have been annually passed in Parliament, and every Article approved of; would it not then be unjust in us now after twenty Years to tell them, we will now overhale all your Accounts? The Accounts you have delivered in, the Approbation you have met with, the Releases you have received, shall pass for nothing: You shall now deliver in a general Account from your first Entry into our Service: We will examine it strictly, and will admit of no Article but what you can fully prove to have been usefully laid out or expended for our Service. Such a Proceeding would be fo unjust, that I cannot think, it needs any farther Explanation.

> But now, Sir, with regard to the other Question. Whether it be now a proper Time for us to enter into an Inquiry? Suppose we had just Ground to suspect the Uprightnels or the Wildom of our late Measures: Suppose them to An. 15. Geo. II. be thought weak or wicked by a great Majority of this House, is this a proper Time for us to employ ourselves about inquiring into and punishing past Measures? When Europe is in such Danger : When we ourselves are in such Danger, are we to consider only how we came upon the Brink, inflead of confidering how to get off? It was faid of the House of Commons that impeached the Earl of Portland and Lord Somers in the Year 1701, that they proceeded in a Manner * which seemed more to affect our Peace at Home. than to prepare for War abroad. I am fure, this might be more justly said of us, should we now resolve upon an Inquiry into the late Conduct of our publick Affairs. Let us now think how to get rid of the present Danger, and of that alone. It deserves, it requires our Attention. When we have secured our own Liberties, and the Liberties of Europe, against the ambitious Projects of France: When we have secured the Freedom of our Navigation and Commerce against the Infults and Injustice of Spain, we shall then have an Opportunity, we shall then have Leisure, to inquire into and punish all publick Offenders, and we may then do it with Safety. Both these defirable Ends we shall, I hope, attain, if we apply to this, and this only: We may, perhaps, be able to acomplish both before the Beginning of next Session of Parliament; and furely no one will fay, we can suffer in the mean Time by the Delay of Justice. For this Reason, Sir, if I thought we had just Cause for an Inquiry: If I condemned, in my own Mind, the whole Course of our Condoct for the last twenty Years, as much as I do really approve it, I should nevertheless be against our entering into an Inquiry, during this Session of Parliament; and therefore, I must give my Negative to the Question.

To this Mr William Pitt reply'd:

Vol. XIII.

Mr Will. Pitt.

What the Gentlemen of the other Side mean by Harangues or Flowers of Rhetorick, I shall not pretend to guess; but if they make use of nothing of that Kind, it is no very good Argument for their Sincerity; for a Man who speaks from his Heart, and is sincerely affected with the Subject he speaks on, as every honest Man must be when he speaks in the Cause of his Country: Such a Man, I say, falls naturally into Sentiments and Expressions which may be called Flowers of Rhetorick, and therefore deserves as little to be taxed with Affectation, as the most stupid Serjeant at Law that ever spoke at the Common Pleas Bar for a Half Guinea Fee.

An. 15. Geo. II. For my Part, I have heard nothing faid in Favour of the Onellion, but what I thought very proper and very much to the Purpole. What has been faid, indeed, upon the other Side of the Question, especially the long Justification that has been made of our late Measures, I cannot think so proper upon this Occasion, because this Motion is founded upon the present melancholy Situation of Affairs, and upon the general Clamour without Doors against the late Conduct of our publick Affairs, and either of these, with me, shall always be a sufficient Reason for agreeing to an immediate Parliamentary Inquiry; for without fuch an Inquiry I cannot, even in my own Mind enter into the Disquisition, whether our publick Measures have been right or no. because I cannot otherwise be furnished with the necessary Lights for

But the Hon. Gentlemen who oppose this Motion. feem to mistake, I shall not say wilfully, the Disserence between a Motion for an Impeachment, and a Motion for an Inquiry. If any Member of this House were to stand up in his Place, and move for impeaching a Minister, he would be obliged to charge him with some particular Crimes or Misdemeanors, and to produce some Proof, or to declare that he was ready to prove the Facts: But any Gentleman may move for an Inquiry, without any particular Allegation, and without offering any Proof, or declaring that he is ready to prove, because the very Defign of an Inquiry is to find out particular Facts and particular Proofs. The general Circumstances of Things, or general Rumours without Doors, are a sufficient Foundation for such a Motion, and for the House's agreeing to it when it is made. This, Sir, has always been the Practice, and has been the Foundation of almost all the Inquiries that were ever fet on Foot in this House, especially those that have been carried on by Secret and Select Committees. What other Foundation was there for the Secret Committee appointed in the Year 1694, (to go no farther back) to inquire into and inspect the Books and Accounts of the East-India * Company and Chamber of London? Nothing but a general Rumour that some corrupt Practices had been made use of. What was the Foundation of the Inquiry in the Year 1715? Did the Hon. Gentleman who snoved for appointing that Secret Committee, charge the former Administration with any particular Crimes? Did he offer any Proofs, or declare that he was ready to prove any Thing? It is faid, the Measures pursued by that Adminifiration were condemned by a great Majority of that House of Commons. What, Sir, were those Ministers condemned Ap. 15. Geo. II. before they were heard? Could any Gentleman be so unjust as to pass Sentence, even in his own Mind, upon a Meafure, before he had inquired into it? He might perhaps dislike the Treaty of Utrecht; but upon Inquity, it might appear to be the best that could be obtained; and it has fince been so far jultified, that it is at least as good, if not better than any Treaty we have made fince that Time.

Sir, it was not the Treaty of Uereche, nor any Measure that Administration had openly pursued, that was the Foundation or the Caufe of an Inquiry into their Conduct. It was the loud Complaints of a great Party in the Nation against them, and the general Suspicion of their having carried on treasonable Negotiations in Favour of the Pretender, and for defeating the Protestant Succession; and the Inquiry was fet on Foot, in order to detect those Practices, if there were any fach, and to find proper Evidence for convicting the Offenders. The fame Argument holds with regard to the Inquiry into the Management of the Directors of the South-Sea Company in the Year 1720. When that Affair was first moved in the House by Mr Neville *, he did not, he could not charge those Directors, or any one of them, with any particular Crimes; nor did he attempt to offer, or say that he was ready to offer any particular Proofs: His Motion, which was, That the Directors of the South-Sea Company should forthwith lay before the House an Account of their Proceedings, was founded upon the general Circumstances of Things, the Distress brought upon the publick Credit of the Nation, and the general and loud Complaints without Doors. This Motion, indeed, reasonable as it was, we know, was opposed by our Courtiers at that Time, and in particular, by two doughty Brothers, who have been Courtiers ever fince; but their Opposition raised such a Warmth in the House, that they were glad to give it up, and never afterwards durit directly oppose that Inquiry. I wish, I could now see the fame Zeal for publick Justice. I am fure, the Circumstances of Affairs descrive it. Our publick Credit was then, indeed, brought into Distress; but now, the Nation itself, Nay, not only this Nation, but all our Friends upon the Continent, are brought into the most imminent Danger.

This, Sir, is admitted even by those who oppose this Motion, and if they have ever lately converted with those that dare speak their Minds, they must admit, that the Murmurs of the People against the Conduct of the Administration are now as general, and as loud, as ever they were upon Z 2 Maria and maria

An; 15. Geo, II. any Occasion; but the Misfortune is, that Gentlemen who are in Office, soldom converse with any but such as are in Office, or want to be in Office, and fuch Men; fer them? think what they will, will always applaud the Conduct of their Superiors; consequently, Gentlemen who are in the Administration, or in any Office under it, can rarely know what is the Voice of the People. The Voice of this House was formerly, I shall grant, and always ought to be the Voice of the People: If new Parliaments were more frequent, and few Placemen, and no Pensioners admitted, it would be fo still; but, if long Parliaments be continued. and a corrupt Influence should prevail, not only at Elections, but in this House, the Voice of this House will generally be very different from, nay often directly contrary to the Voice of the People. However, as this is not, I believe, the Case at present, I hope, that there is a Majority of us! who know what is the Voice of the People; and if it be admitted by all, that the Nation is at present in the utmost! Diffress and Danger, and admitted by a Majority, that the Voice of the People is loud against the late Conduct of our Administration, this Motion must be agreed to, because, I have shewn, that these two Circumstances, without any particular Charge, have been the Foundation of almost all Parel liamentary Inquiries.

"I shall readily admit, Sir, that we should have very little to do with the Character or Reputation of a Minister, if it no way affected his Matter; but as it does, and always? must affect our Sovereign, as the People may become difaffected as well as discontented, when they find the King! continues obstinately to employ a Minister who, they think, oppresses them at Home, and betrays them Abroad, we are therefore, in Duty to our Sovereign, obliged to inquire into the Conduct of a Minister, when it becomes generally suspected by the People; in order that we may vindicate his Character, if he appears innocent, as to every Thing laid to his Charge, or that we may get him removed from the Councils of our Sovereign, and condignly punished, if he appears guilty.

· After having faid thus much, Sir, I have no great Occasion to answer what has been said, that no Parliamentary Inquiry ought ever to be fet up, unless we are convinced that fomething has been done amifs. Sir, the very Name given! to this House of Parliament shews the contrary. We are called the Grand Inquest of the Nation, and as such it is our Duty to inquire into every Step of publick Management, either Abroad or at Home, in order to see that nothing has been done amiss. It is not necessary upon every Occasional to establish a Secret Committee: This is never necessary, An. 15. Geo. II. but when the Affairs to be brought before them, or some of those Affairs, are supposed to be of such a Nature as ought to be kept secret; but as Experience has shewn, that nothing but a superficial Inquiry is ever made by a general Committee, or a Committee of the whole House, I wish, that all Estimates and Accounts, and many other Affairs, were respectively referred to Select Committees. Their Inquiries would be more exact, and the receiving of their Reports would not take up so much of our Time as is represented; but if it did, as it is our Duty to make strict Inquiries into every Thing relating to the Publick, as we affemble here for that Purpose, we ought to do our Duty before we break up; and I am sure, his present Majesty would never put an End to any Session, till both Houses had fully performed their Duty to their Country.

1 It is faid, by some Gentlemen, that by this Inquiry we shall be in Danger of discovering the Secrets of our Government to our Enemies. This Argument, Sir, by proving too much proves nothing at all. If it were admitted, it would always have been, and for ever will be, an Argument against our inquiring into any Affair in which our Government can be supposed to have a Concern. Our Inquiries would then be confined to the Conduct of our little Companies, or of Inferior Custom House Officers or Excisemen; for if we should be so bold as to offer to inquire into the Conduct of Commissioners or great Companies, it would be faid, the Government had a Concern in their Conduct, and the Secrets of Government must not be divulged. Every Gentleman must see, that this would be the Consequence of admitting such an Argument; but besides, it is salse in Fact, and contrary to Experience. We have had many Parliamentary Inquiries into the Conduct of Ministers of State. and yet I defy any one to shew, that any State Affair was thereby discovered which ought to have been concealed, or that our publicle Affairs, either Abroad or at Home, ever fuffered by any such Discovery. There are Methods, Sir, for preventing Papers of a very secret Nature from coming into the Hands of the Servants attending, or even of all the Members of our Secret Committee. If his Majesty should by Message acquaint us that some of the Papers sealed up and laid before us required the utmost Secrecy, we might refer them to our Committee, with an Instruction for them to order only two or three of the Number to inspect such Papers. and to report from them nothing but what they thought might be fafely communicated to their whole Number. By this Method, I hope, the Danger of a Discovery would be effectuAn. 15. Geo. II. effectually removed; therefore this Danger cannot be a good Argument against a Parliamentary Inquiry.

The other Objection, Sir, is really surprising, because it is founded upon a Circumstance which, in all former Times, has been admitted as a strong Argument for an immediate Inquiry. The Hon. Gentlemen are so ingenuous as to confels, that our Affairs both Abroad and at Home, are at prefent in the utmost Distress; but say they, you ought to free yourfelves from this Diffress, before you inquire how or by what Means you was brought into it. Sir, according to this Way of arguing, a Minister that has plundered and betrayed his Country, and fears being called to an Account in Parliament. has nothing to do but to involve his Country into a dangerous War, or some other great Distress, in order to prevent an Inquiry into his Conduct, because he may be dead before that War is at an End, or that Diffress got over. Thus, like the most villainous of all Thieves, after he had plundered the House, he has nothing to do but to set it in a Flame. that he may escape in the Confusion. It is really assonishing to hear such an Argument seriously urged in this House. But fay these Gentlemen, if you found yourself upon a Precipice. would you stand to inquire how you was led there, before you confidered how to get off? No, Sir; but if a Guide had led me there, I should very probably be provoked to throw him over, before I thought of any Thing elfe; at least, I am fure, I should not trust to the same Guide for bringing me off; and this, Sir, is the strongest Argument that can be urged for an immediate Inquiry.

. ' We have been for these twenty Years under the Guidance, I may truly fay, of one Man, one fingle Minister. We now at last find ourselves upon a dangerous Precipice: Ought not we then immediately to inquire, whether we have been led upon this Precipice by his Ignorance of Wickedness? And if by either, to take Care not to trust to his Guidance for leading us off? This is an additional, and a thronger Argument for this Inquiry than ever was for any former; for if we do not inquire, we shall probably remain under his Guidance; because, tho' he be removed from the Treasury Board, he is not from the King's Closet, nor prohably will, unless it be by our Advice, or by our fending him to a Lodging at the other End of the Town, where he cannot do so much Harm to his Country. Sir, the Distress we are in at Home is evidently owing to bad Occonomy, and to our having been led into many needless Expences: The Diffress and the Danger we are in Abroad, are evidently owing to the Misconduct of our War with Spain, and to the little Confidence put in our Counfels by our natural and ans tient Allies. This is so evident, that I should not have Ag. 15, Geo. 11. thought it necessary to have entered into any particular Explanation, if an Hon. Gentleman on the other Side had not entered into a particular Justification of most of our late Meafures, both Abroad and at Home; but as he has done fo. tho' not, in my Opinion, quite to the Purpose of the pretent Debate, yet, I hope, I shall be excused making some Remarks upon what he has faid on that Subject, beginning, as he did, with the Measures taken for punishing the South-Sea Directors, and restoring publick Credit, after the terrible Shock it met with in the Year 1720.

As those Measures, Sir, were among the first Exploits of our late, and I fear still our Prime Minister, at least his first fince he came last into the Administration; and as the Committee proposed, if agreed to, will probably confift of one and twenty, I wish the Motion had been for one Year' farther back, that the Number of Years might have been equal to the Number of Inquirers, and that it might have comprehended the first of those Measures; for as it stands, it will not comprehend the Methods taken for punishing the Directors, nor the first Regulations made for restoring publick Credit; and with regard to both, some Practices might perhaps be discovered, that would deserve a much severer Punishment than any of those Directors met with. Considering the many Tricks and Frauds made use of by those Directors and their Agents, for drawing People into their Ruin, I am not a little surprised to hear it now said, that their Punishment was ever thought too fevere. Justice by the Lump was an Epithet given it, not because it was thought too severe, but because it was a Piece of Cunning made use of for screening the most heinous Offenders, who, if they did not deserve to be hanged, deserved at least to have that total Ruin brought upon them, which they had brought upon many unthinking Men, and therefore they very ill deferved those Allowances that were made them by Parliament.

Then, Sir, as to the refloring of publick Credit, its speedy Restoration was sounded upon the Credit of the Nation, and not upon the Wildom or Justice of the Meafares taken to restore it. Was it a wise Method to remit to the South Sea Company the whole Seven Millions, or thereabout, which they had solemnly engaged to pay to the Publick? It might as well be faid, that a private Man's giving away a great Part of his Estate to those that no Way deserved it, would be a wife Method for reviving or establishing his Credit. If those Seven Millions had been distributed among the poorer Sort of Annuitants, it would have been both generous and charitable; but to give it among the Proprietors

An. 15. Geo. II. in general, was neither generous nor just, because most of them deferved no Favour from the Publick: For as the Proceedings of the Directors were authorifed by General Courts, those who were then the Proprietors were in some Measure accessary to the Frauds of the Directors, and therefore deserved to have been punished, rather than rewarded. as they really were; because every one of them who continued to hold Stock in that Company got, by the Regulations then made, near 50 per Cent. added to his Capital: most Part of which arose from the high Price the Annuitants were by Act of Parliament obliged to take Stock at. and was therefore a most flagrant Piece of Injustice done to the Annuitants. But we need not be at a Lofs for the true Cause of this Act of Injustice, when we consider, that a certain Gentleman had a great many Friends among the old Stockholders, and few or none among the Annuitants.

' Another Act of Injustice which, I believe, we may ascribe to the same Cause, relates to those who were engag'd in heavy Contracts for Stock or Subscriptions, many of whom groan under the Load to this very Day; for after we had by Act of Parliament quite altered the Nature. though not the Name of the Stock they had bought, and made it much lefs valuable, than it was when they engaged to pay a high Price for it, I must think, it was an Act of publick Injustice, to leave them liable to be prosecuted at Law for the whole Money they had engaged to pay; and I am fure, it was not a Method for restoring private Credit, upon which our Trade and Navigation very much depend. If the fame Regulation had been made with regard to them. as was made with regard to those who had borrowed Money of the Company, or a Sort of Uti possidetis enacted, by declaring all fuch Contracts void, fo far as related to any future Payments, it would not have been unjust, and was extremely necessary for quieting the Minds of the People, for preventing their ruining one another at Law, and for refloring Credit between Man and Man, which is so necessary in a trading Country; but there is Reason to suppose, that a certain Gentleman had many Friends among the Sellers in those Contracts, and very few among the Buyers, which was the Reason why the latter could obtain little or no Relief or Mercy by any publick Law or Regulation.

' Then, Sir, with regard to the extraordinary Grants made to the Civil List, the very Reason given by the Hon. Gentlemen for justifying those Grants, is a strong Reason for an immediate Inquiry. If there have arisen any confiderable Charges upon that Revenue, let us fee what those Charges were; let us examine whether or no they were ne-ceffary. We have the more Reason to do this, because the An. 15. Geo. 11. Revenue fettled upon his late Majesty's Civil List, was at least as great as was settled either upon King William or Queen Anne, and yet neither of them ever asked any extraordinary Grant, but on the contrary, the latter gave out of her Civil List Revenue 100,000 1. yearly, towards the Support of the War; and yet there was as great Hospitality in the Royal Palace during her Time, as there has been ever fince. Besides, there is a general Rumour without Doors, that the Civil List is now greatly in Arrear, which, if true, renders an Inquiry absolutely necessary; for it is inconsistent with the Honour and Dignity of the Crown of these Kingdoms to be in Arrear to its Tradesmen and Servants; and 'tis the Duty of this House to take Care, that the Revenue we have settled for supporting the Honour and Dignity of our Crown, shall not be squandered or misapplied: If former Parliaments have failed in this Respect, they must be blamed, tho' they cannot be punished; but we ought now to attone for their Neglect, and we may punish those, if they can be discover'd, who were the Cause of it.

I come now in Course to the Excise-Scheme, which the Hon. Gentleman fays, ought to be forgiven, because it was easily given up. Sir, it was not easily given up. The Promoter of that Scheme did not eafily give it up; he gave it up with Sorrow, with Tears in his Eyes, when he saw, and not till he saw it impossible to carry it through the House. Did not his Majority decrease every Division? It was almost certain, that if he had pushed it any farther, the Majority would have turned against him. * His Sorrow shewed his Disappointment; and his Disappointment shewed that his Defign was higher than of preventing Frauds in the Customs. He was at that Time to sensible of the Influence of Excise-Laws and Excisemen with regard to Elections, and of the great Occasion he would have for that Sort of Influence at the next General Election, which was then approaching, that it is impossible to suppose, he had not that I fluence in View ; and if he had, it was a most wicked Attempt against our Constitution; therefore he deserved the Treatment he met with from the People. Perhaps there was none but what Gentlemen are pleased to call Mob, concerned in burning him in Effigy; but as the Mob confifts chiefly of Children. Journeymen and Servants, who speak the Sentiments of their Parents and Masters, we may thence judge of the Sentiments of the better Sort of People.

An. 15. Geo. 11. The Hon. Gentleman faid, these were all the Measures of a domestick Nature, that could be found fault with, because none other were mentioned in this Debate. Sir, he has already heard a Reason why no other Wrong Measures should be particularly mentioned in this Debate: If it were necessary, many others might be mentioned. Is not the keeping up of so numerous an Army in Time of Peace to be found fault with? Is not the fitting out so many expensive Squadrons for no Purpose, to be found fault with? Are not the Encroachments made upon the Sinking Fund, the reviving the Salt-Duty, the rejecting many uteful Bills and Mo. tions in Parliament, and many other domenick Measures, to be found fault with? The Weakness or Wickedness of those Measures has been often demonstrated, their ill Consequences were at the respective Times foretold, and those Consequences are now become visible by our present Distress.

Now, Sir, with regard to the foreign Measures, which the Hon. Gentleman has attempted to justify. The Treaty of Hanover deserves indeed to be first mentioned, because from thence springs the Danger, which Europe is now exposed to; and it is impossible to assign a Reason for our entering into that Treaty, without supposing that we then resolv'd to be reveng'd on the Emperor, for retufing to grant us fome Favour in Germany. It is in vain now to infift upon the fecret Engagements entered into by the Courts of Fienna and Madrid, as the Cause of that Treaty. Time has fully shewn, that there never were any such Engagements; and his late Majefty's Speech from the Throne cannot here be admitted as any Evidence of the Fact. Every one knows that, in Parliament, the King's Speech is always confidered as the Speech of the Minister; and furely a Minister is not to be allowed to bring his own Speech as an Evidence of a Fact in his own Justification. If it be pretended that his late Majesty had some Sort of Information, that such Engagements had been entered into, that very Pretence furnishes an unanswerable Argument for an Inquiry; for as the Information now appears to have been groundlefs, we ought to inquire into it, because, if it appears to be such an Information as ought not to have been believed, that Minister ought to be punished who advised his late Majelly to give Credit to it, and to run the Nation into such pernicious Measures in Consequence of it.

At the Time this Treaty was enter'd into, we wanted nothing from the Emperor upon our own Account. The abolishing of the Oftend Company was a Demand we had no Right to make, nor were we in Interest much obliged to infift upon it, because that Company would have been more prejudicial to the Interest, both of the French and Dutch East-India Trade, than to ours; and if it had been a Point An. 15. Geo. II. that concern'd us much, we might probably have gained it. by acceding to the Vienna Treaty between the Emperor and Spain, or by guarantying the Pragmatick Sanction, which we afterwards did in the most absolute Manner, without any Consideration at all. We wanted nothing from Spain but a Departure from the Pretence she had just begun, or, I believe, hardly begun to let up in an express Manner, with regard to fearthing and feizing our Ships in the American Seas; and this we did not obtain, or perhaps did not defire to obtain by the Treaty of Seville. By that Treaty we obtained nothing, but we made another Step towards bringing on that Danger which Europe is now involved in, by uniting the Courts of France and Spain, and laying a Foundation for a new Breach between the Courts of Spain and Vienna.

I shall grant, Sir, our Ministers appear to have been fond and diligent enough in negociating, and writing Letters and Memorials to the Court of Spain; but by all I have looked into, it appears, they never rightly understood, or perhaps would not understand the Point they were negociating about; and as they suffered themselves to be amused, as they fay, with fair Promises, for ten Years together, whilst in the mean Time our Merchants were plunder'd, and our Trade interrupted, we ought to inquire into this Affair; for if it should appear, that they allowed themselves to be amused with fuch Answers, as no Man of Honour in such Circumstances would have taken, nor any Man of Common Sense been amused with, they must have had some secret Motive for allowing themselves to be thus impos'd upon; this fecret Motive we may perhaps discover by an Inquiry, and as It must be a wicked one, if it can be discovered, they ought to be severely punished.

But, in Excuse for their Conduct, it is faid, our Miniflers had a laudable Shine's of involving their Country in a War. Sir, this Shiness could not proceed from any Regard to their Country: It was involved in a War: Spain was carrying on a War against our Trade, and that in the most infulting Manner too, during the whole Time of their Negociations. It was this very Shinefs, or at least their making the Court of Spain too sensible of it, that at last made it abfolutely necessary for us to begin a War on our Side. If they had at first infisted properly and peremptorily upon an explicit Answer, Spain would have expressly given up the Pretence the had just fet up; but by the long Experience we allowed her, the found the Fruits of that Pretence to plentifill and favoury, that the thought them worth rifking a War for, and the Damage we had suffered became to confiderable, 1741

A a 2 that

Am 15 Geo, II that it was worth contending for. Besides, the Court of Spain was convinced, that whilst we were under such an Administration, nothing could provoke us to begin the War on our Side; or if we did, it would be managed weakly or pufillanimously; and have we not fince found, that they form'd a right Judgment? Nothing, Sir, ever demanded more a Parliamentary Inquiry than our Conduct in this War. The only Branch of it we have inquired into, we have already censured and condemned: Is not this a good Reason for inquiring into every other Branch? Disappointment and ill Success have always, till now, occasioned a Parliamentary Inquiry. Inactivity of itself is a sufficient Cause for an Inquiry. We have now all these Reasons concurring. Our Admirals Abroad defire nothing more; because they are conscious that our Inactivity and ill Success would appear not to be owing to their Conduct, but to the Conduct of these that fent them out.

> ' I cannot conclude, Sir, without taking Notice of the two other Foreign Measures mentioned by the Hon. Gentleman. Our Conduct in the Year 1734, with regard to the War between the Emperor and France, may be rafily nocounted for, tho' not easily excused. Ever since the last Accession of our late Minister to Power, we seems to have had a Spite against the House of Austria. Our Guaranty: of the Pragmatick Sanction was an Effect of that Spice; because we entered into it, when, as has fince appeared; we had no Mind to perform our Engagement; and by that sham-Guaranty got the Emperor to admit of the Introduction of the Spanish Troops into Italy, which he would not otherwise have done. The Preparations we made in that Year, the Armies we raised, and the Fleets we fitted out, were not to guard against the Event of the War Abroad, but against the Event of the ensuing Election at Home. The new Commissions, the Promotions, and the Money laid our on these Preparations, were of excellent Use at the Time of a Gen. neral Election, and, in some Measure attorned for the Less of the Excise Scheme; but France and her Allies were well. convinced, that we would, in no Event, declare against them, otherwise they would not have dar'd to attack the Emperor. at that Time; for Majcowy, Poland, Germany and Britain, would have been, by much, an over-Match for them. It was not our Preparations that fet Bounds to the Ambition of France, but her getting all she wanted at that Time for here. felf, and all she defired for her Allies. Her own Prudence directed her, that it was not then a proper Time to push her Views farther; because she did not know, but that the Spiece rit of this Nation might get the better, as it has fince: done with would have been of effectual Service.

I am surprised, Sir, to hear the Hon. Gentleman now fay, that we gave up nothing, or got any Thing by our infamous Convention with Spain. Did we not give up the Freedom of our Trade and Navigation, by submitting it to be regulated by Plenipotentiaries? Can Freedom be regulated without being confined, and confequently in some Part destroyed? Did not we give up Georgia, or some Part of it. by submitting to have new Limits settled by Plenipotentiaries? Did we not give up all the Reparation of Honour we had so just a Title to insist on? Did we not give up all Reparation of the Damage we had fuffered, amounting to 5 or 600,000 L for the paltry Sum of 27,000 L. For this was all Spain promised to pay, after deducting the 68,000 l. which we, by the Declaration annexed to that Treaty, allowed her to infift on having from our South-Sea Company, under the Penalty of stripping them of the Affiento Contract, and all the Privileges they were thereby intitled to. Even this Sum of 27,000 1. or more, they had before acknowledged to be due, on Account of Ships they had allowed to have been unjustly taken, and had actually fent Orders for their Restitution: So that, by this infamous Treaty, we got nothing, and gave up every Thing; and therefore, in my Opinion, the Honour of this Nation can never be retrieved, vales the Advisers and Authors of it be censured and punished, which cannot regularly be done without a Parliamentary Inquiry.

By these, and the like wicked, or weak and pusillanimous Measures, we are become the Ridicule of every Court in Europe, and have lost the Confidence of all our antient Allies: By these we have encouraged France to extend her ambitious Views, and now at last to attempt carrying them into Execution. By bad OEconomy and Extravagance in our domestick Measures, we have brought ourselves into fuch Diffress at Home, that we are almost utterly incapable of entering into a War: By Weakness or Wickedness in our foreign Mcasures, we have brought the Affirs of Europe into fuch Diffress, that it is almost impossible for us to avoid entering into a War. By these Means we have been brought upon the dangerous Precipice on which we now find ourselves ; and shall we trust our being led safely off to the same Guide that has led us on? Sir, it is impossible for him to lead us off; it is impossible for us to get off, without first recovering that Confidence among our antient Allies which this Na-

An. 15. Geo. II. most fatal Consequence now that we are engaged in one War, and in great Likelihood of being foon obliged to engage in another. This likewise seemed to have Weight. and, I believe, prevailed with some Gentlemen to be against my former Motion; for which Reason I shall now only move, That a Committee be appointed to inquire into the Conduct of Robert Earl of Orford, during the last Ten Years of his being First Commissioner of the Treasury, and Chancellor and Under-Treasurer of his Majesty's Exchequer.

' Sir, I hope the Time of Inquiry proposed by this Motion will not be thought too extensive; for considering the chief Crime of a domestick Nature, he has been accused of. our Inquiry cannot, I think, be confined within nairower The Crime I mean, is that of applying not only all the Favours of the Crown, but even the publick Money. towards gaining a corrupt Influence at Elections and in Par-This he is generally accused of by the Voice of the People without Doors, and, I believe, there is not a Gentleman in this House that has been chosen in Opposition to what was called the Court Interest, who was not sensible of some such Practices being carried on against him, before and at the Time of his Election. Every Gentleman must be fensible, that it is very difficult to fix such Practices upon a Minister, because they are not only carried on in an hidden Manner, but by Tools and Under-Agents, who do not appear at the Election as Agents for the Minister, but as Agents for the Court Candidate; and generally spend their Money very freely, tho' it is often known, that neither they nor their Candidate had ever any Money of their own to spare. Nay, those Agents are often known to be Treasury-Agents, tho' in the common Course of Justice it is impossible to prove that they are. It will even be difficult for a Committee of this House, with all the Powers we can give them, to trace this Practice up to its original Source; but, confidering the general Suspicion without Doors, and the many strong Reasons there are for believing that Suspicion to be well grounded, we ought certainly to aim at it; and if we do, we cannot begin later than the Time when canvassing may be supposed to have begun for the chusing of the last Parliament, which, I reckon, was about ten Years ago; for as that Parliament was chosen in the Summer 1734, we must suppose that the Candidates, especially where there was like to be an Opposition, begun to take Measures for securing their Interest in the Summer 1732, which will just come within the Term of ten Years, computing back from this Time.

M. H. Con, J. Levill, Rich Co., J.

For this Reason, I hope this will appear to be the An. 15. Geo. II. shortest Time I could move for ; and as it is much shorter than the Time proposed by my last Motion, I hope, I shall have the Concurrence of many Gentlemen who then appeared against me; especially as I have likewise in this taken Care to obviate the other Objection, of its being too extenfive as to the Matters proposed to be enquired into; for as this noble Lord had by none of his Offices any Thing to do with foreign Affairs, this Motion cannot be faid to relate to. or comprehend any Affairs of that Nature, unless it be supposed, that this Minister directed every other Branch of publick Business, as well as that of the Treasury, which, I am fure, none of his Friends will pretend to fay, because this would be as great a Crime as any he is accused of. This Motion cannot therefore be supposed to relate to any foreign Affair, and, consequently, an Inquiry into this Nobleman's Conduct, cannot be supposed to endanger the Discovery of any of the Secrets of our Government. Nay, if he, whilst he was in Office, confined himself to the Duty of his Office, our Inquiry, in pursuance of this Motion, can comprehend but one Branch even of our domestick Affairs, and that Branch too, which, of all others, has the least to do with our foreign Affairs. An Inquiry into the Conduct of a Secretary of State, a Secretary at War, a Commissioner of the Admiralty, or even the Lord High Chancellor, might be faid to have some Relation to foreign Affairs; but I cannot fuggest to myself what a Commissioner of the Treafury can have to do with foreign Affairs, or how an Inquiry into his Conduct can have the least Relation to any foreign Affair whatsoever; consequently, I hope, this Motion will appear to be quite free from that Objection which seemed to be urged with so much Weight against my former; and as fo much has in this Session been said, upon sormer Occasions, about the Necessity of an immediate Inquiry, I shall add no more, but move to resolve, That a Committee be appointed, as I have before mentioned.

This Motion being feconded by Sir John St Aubin, the Sir J. St Aubin. Hon. Horatio Walpole *. jun. spoke to this Effect:

Whatever were the prevailing Objections, or may be Mr H. Walpole, thought to have been the prevailing Objections against the jun. former Motion, by some Gentlemen, that of its being too extensive, either as to Time or Matter, was far from being the most prevailing with me. The Objection which prevailed most with me against the last, and will equally prevail against

[&]quot; Youngest Son of the Earl of Orford,

An. 15. Geo. II. against this, was, that, I think, we have no Cause for an Inquiry, and, if we had, this is not a proper Time for it. The Suspicions that are entertained, and the Clamours that are made without Doors, are neither the Suspicions nor the Clamours of fensible and discerning Men, nor of Men of Fortune and Circumstances in our Country, unless it be such as cover their Disaffection to the Royal Family under the Cloak of being discontented with the Measures pursued by the Administration. They are the Suspicions and Clamours either of Jacobites and Republicans, or of the mere Mob; and, I hope, I shall never see the Measures or Proceedings of this House directed by either of these Sorts of Men. If you were to be directed by Jacobites and Republicans, you would not only inquire, but hang up every Man that dared to serve the Royal Family now upon our Throne, that they might thereby, at last, get the Royal Family itself banished out of the Kingdom; and, if you were to be directed by the Mob, you would, for their Diversion, and for no other Cause, send some Minister or other every other Year to Tyburn or Tower-Hill. Such an Execution would be a Holyday to all the Children, 'Prentices, and Journeymen about London; and if they are diverted, they trouble their Heads very little at whose Expence, or about the Justice of the Sentence.

' The Suspicions or the Murmurs without Doors are never to be a Rule for our Proceedings, unless we are fully convinc'd, that there is some very good Ground for those Suspicions and Murmurs; and this, I think, cannot with Realon be faid by any Gentleman at prefent. The only Ground of Complaint which the Noble Lord was pleafed to hint at, was that of applying the publick Money, and all the Favours of the Crown, towards gaining a corrupt Influence at Elections and in Parliament. Sir, with Regard to the Favours of the Crown, I do not see how any Minister can be made to answer for their Disposal, because they are directly disposed of by the King himself, who very often dispoles of them without so much as asking the Advice of the Minister, whose proper Department they belong to; and therefore, if any Fault could be supposed to have been committed in this Respect, it would be a Charge against the King himself; which, I hope, will be allowed to be a Sort of a Charge that cannot be brought by this House, or by either House of Parliament. Perhaps, those Favours have been lately granted generally to those, or the Friends of those, that approved his Majesty's Measures in Parliament. Sir, it is very natural they should be so disposed of: They have always been fo disposed of. His Majesty, I am very sure, never proposes, much less pursues any Measure but what he thinks right; An. 15. Geo. II. therefore he must suppose those Gentlemen to be the best Friends to their Country, who approve of and support his Measures in Parliament; and I hope it will not be imputed to him, or to any of his Ministers as a Crime, to bestow the Favours of the Crown upon those they think the best Friends to their Country. This, I hope, will answer for those Favours of the Crown that are bestowed upon Members of Parliament; and, if they have any Favours in their Gift. or can obtain any Favours from the Crown for other Persons. they are, in Gratitude, obliged to dispose of those Favours among those who supported their Interest at their Election. This has always been the Practice, it always will, it always ought to be the Practice; because, as I have said, it is what Gentlemen are in Gratitude bound to do; and to be grateful will never, I hope, be deem'd criminal.

'If this, Sir, is to be call'd a corrupt Influence, it is impossible for us to be without it, as long as the Crown has any Favours to bellow. It is what every Centleman practifes, and ought to practife in his private Capacity as well as in his publick. If he has any Favours to bestow, if he can procure any Favours, as a good Citizen he ought to bestow them upon, or procure them for those that, in his Opinion, deserve best of their Country, and if he pursues what he thinks the Interest of his Country, he must think those Men descrive best of their Country who approve of the Measures he approves of, and support him in the Pursuit of them. This may, indeed, be a corrupt Influence, with regard to some of thole upon whom the Favours are bestowed: They may, perhaps, pretend to approve of, and may support their Patron in the Pursuit of Measures which they do not in their Hearts approve of; but, with regard to him, it is no corrupt Influence, as long as he pursues those Measures which, he thinks, will contribute most to the Security and Happiness of his Country. In the Person who bestows, the Disposal of Favours can never be supposed to be with a Design to to procure a corrupt Influence; nor can it be imputed to him as a Crime, unless he pursues such Measures as he knows to be destructive to his Country; and as this is a Crime in the Mind only, we can never discover it by an Inquiry, nor can it be justly punished by any sublunary Power: It can neither be detected nor punished by any Thing but the Hand of God.

With regard to the Disposal of publick Money, it is easier, indeed, to discover a criminal Practice. If that has been disposed of towards bribing Votes, either in Parliament or at Elections, and without a Pretence of any real and honest Service perform'd to the Publick, it may be detected, and ought to be punished. But there are two very strong Vot. XIII.

An. 15. Goo. 11, Reasons for making us believe, that no such Practice has lately been made use of. Such Practices, as all criminal Practices are, are generally carried on in a hidden Manner : but to issue Money from the Treasury for this Purpose, I think impossible to be done in a hidden Manner. There are so many Commissioners, and so many Clerks attending that Board, that such a Practice could not long escape a Discovery; and befides, there must be fo many Agents employed to carry this Money to the Country, and to distribute it in a proper Manner, that no Man of common Sense would trust to the Secret's being kept. Some one of those to whom it must be communicated, would certainly, either out of Regard to his Country, or in Expectation of a Reward, or from some Disappointment, become an Informer, and a direct Evidence against the high Criminal. As no such Thing has happened: As the Noble Lord does not fo much as pretend, that he has any fuch Information or Evidence, I must suppose, that no fuch Crime has been lately committed. Even if there were a general Rumour among Men of Sense and Discretion without Doors, that such a Crime had been frequently committed. I should look upon it as a mere groundless Rumour, unless some Gentleman of Character could say, he had direct Evidence to produce.

' Another Argument, Sir, for my thinking the committing of this Crime impossible, is the Method introduced by the Revolution, of appropriating all Parliamentary Grants, and the regular Accounts of the Disposal of all publick Monies that have been of late Years laid annually before the Parliament. These Grants are generally so far from having any Excess or Surplus, that they are often infufficient for answering the Services to which they are appropriated by Parliament; and if ever any Surplus has arifen, it has always been accounted for, and has been applied by the next succeeding Session to the Service of the ensuing Year. From hence, I think it impossible to suppose, that any one of the Commissioners of the Treasury. or all of them together, if they were Confederates in the Crime, could have the Command of any publick Money. which they might apply towards carrying on the Practice complained of. I fay, Sir, they could have the Command of no publick Money, which they could apply to this Purpose, unless they took it from the Civil List Revenue; and if we confider the many Checks the Disposal of that Revenue is liable to, and the great Care his Majesty takes of that Part of it which is drawn out by special Warrant, we cannot suppose that they could apply any Part of that Revenue to the carrying on of such a Practice, especially such large Sums as would be necessary for carrying it on with Effect, without supposing,

Supposing, which God forbid any one should suppose, that An. 15. Geo. II.

his Majetty himself was a Socius Criminis.

For these Reasons, Sir, I cannot suppose we have the least Cause or Reason for setting up such an Inquiry as is proposed by this Motion; and with all due Regard to this House, I must say, that if an Inquiry were set up, as, I hope there never will, without any apparent Cause whatever, I should very much suspect, that it proceeded from Malice and Refentment, in which Case I should very little expect, that the Person whose Conduct was by such Means to be inquired into, should meet with any Candour or fair Treatment. If I judge more favourably of the Cause and Character of the Noble Lord, whose Conduct is so particularly proposed to be inquired into, than other Gentlemen do, I hope the Connection I have with him, the natural Duty I owe him, will plead my Excuse. If I thought his Character suffered among the valuable and discerning Part of Mankind, and fuch as are true Friends to our happy Constitution, and the Royal Family now upon our Throne, as I am fully convinced of his Innocence, the same Duty that now prompts me to be the first to oppose an Inquiry into his Conduct, would, in that Case, prompt me to be the first to propose it, as foon as a proper Time presented for that Purpose, which I cannot think the present is.

When the Nation, Sir, is in so much Danger, when our best and most natural Ally upon the Continent is in the most imminent Danger of being destroyed, or so much reduced as never for the suture to be able to do us any Service; when we ought to employ all our Time in consulting and taking proper Measures for extricating ourselves and our Allies from the Danger that now threaten all of us; would it be proper, would it be prudent for us to take up our Time with inquiring into the little Frands that may have been committed in the Management of our publick Revenue, supposing we were certain that some such had been committed? It would give the Courts Abroad such a mean Opinion of our Prudence, or such a Suspicion of our Zeal for the present Relief of Europe, that none of them would treat with us, or enter into any Concert or Negociation with our Sovereign.

For this Reason, Sir, if the Case were such as I have just mentioned: If from thence I thought myself bound in Duty and Assession to the best of Parents, as well as ont of regard to myself, to promote an Inquiry, in order to vindicate a Character in which I glory, and from which I hope to reap Honour as long as I live, I should at the present Criss, and till I saw my Country out of Danger, suspend

An. 15. Geo: II. my aiming at that Satisfaction. An Inquiry into any Minifler's Conduct always has, and always will increase the Violence of those Animosities, which must reign amongst us as long as we are a free People; for let a Minister be never fo innocent, let the Inquiry be never to strict and impartial, let his Justification be as clear as the Sun, there will remain fome cloudy Minds where no Truth can penetrate, and the Animofity of such will receive fresh Vigour from their Difappointment. On the other Hand, let a Minister be never fo guilty, let his Sentence be never fo moderate, there will be some, perhaps many, whose Friendship will obstruct the Rays of Truth: They will think he has met with Injustice, and their Revenge will add Violence to their Animofity. this a proper Time to create such a Dispute or Division? Our Enemies Abroad would certainly offer Affistance to the offended Party at Home, and their Disappointment or Revenge might smother those Yearnings which would otherwise arise in Favour of the Peace and Safety of their Country:

. Thus, Sir, as I think we have at prefent no Caufe; and as, I think, this would be a very improper Time for fetting up any Inquiry into the late Conduct of our publick Affairs! As these were the two chief Arguments that prevailed with me to be against the last Motion for an Inquity; and as both these militate as strongly against the Inquiry now proposed, I must give my Negative to the Noble Lord's Mo-

Mr Digby.

This was answer'd by the Hon. Edward Digby, as follows:

I believe, Sir, every Man present in this House, will readily excuse the young Gentleman who first opposed this Motion, for giving his Negative to the Question. I believe no one expects his Approbation of fuch a Question; because, I am convinced, he thinks the noble Lord, whose Conduct is now proposed to be inquired into, was never guilty of any Crime, nor suspected to be so by any Gentleman of Fortune and Character in this Kingdom. He may, perhaps, have now and then heard a Huzza upon an unlucky Occasion among the Mob in the Streets; but furely no Gentleman would be so unpolite, except in this Place, where we are in Honour obliged to speak our Minds freely, as to infinuate to the Son the least Suspicion, that his Father had plunder'd his Country, misapplied the publick Money, and form'd a Scheme for overturning the happy Constitution. I shouldnot have been so personal, Sir, if I had not thought it absolutely necessary to say what was proper for preventing the Hon. Gentleman's strong Assertions from having any Weight in this House. He may believe what he afferts to be true: An. 15. Geo. II. I am persuaded he does; but he cannot be supposed to know the Fact, therefore his Assertion can have no Authority; and, I believe there are many Gentlemen in this House, who are in the same Circumstances with him.

But, Sir, I would have that Gentleman, and every other Gentleman, to take Care what they fay, when they infinuate, that no Gentleman of Sense and Fortune, unless he be a Jacobite or Republican, has the least Suspicion of the noble Lord's Conduct now under our Confideration. Have not they, upon former Occasions, heard many Gentlemen in this House, not only declare their having Suspicions, but give, what I thought, incontestable Reasons for thewing, that those Suspicions are well grounded? I believe, none of those Gentlemen will be directly charged with being a Man of no Fortune or Character, or with being a Jacobite or Republican; and they have, upon all Occasions, shewn themselves to be Men of as good Sense as those who affert the contrary. It would be unlucky for his Majesty, and his Family, as well as for our present happy Constitution, if all were Jacobites or Republicans that suspect our late Minister's Conduct: His Majelly would find many of them, perhaps a Majority, both in his Army, and among his Servants, who, tho' they diffemble their Sentiments at prefent, would certainly declare themselves openly, and take Meafures accordingly, upon the first favourable Opportunity. Those who have a true Regard for the Security of his Majelly's Government, will be extremely cautious of propagating fuch Accufations. It was the Cultom of King Charles the First's Court, in the Beginning of his Reign, to tax all those who opposed their arbitrary Measures with being Puritans: What was the Confequence? Most of those Men actually became to, and thereby made the Puritans such a powerrul Party in the Kingdom, as at last pulled down that unforunate King from the Throne he fate on, and, de fund en comble, overturned the Conflictation of our Government.

As there are certainly great Complaints without Doors, of Misapplication and Corruption: As this Fact is proved by the Tellimony of many Gentlemen in the House, who have no Places, Penhous, or Preferments to bestow, and, consequently, are better Judges than those that have; if I were a Placeman and a Friend to our late Minister, as all, I think, of his Friends are, tho', from the Complaisance, or, perhaps, Dishmulation of those I conversed with, I had never heard of there being any such Complaints without Doors, yet from the Tellimony of so many Gentlemen who are the best Judges of the People's Sentiments, I should cer-

An. 13. Geo. II, tainly believe the Fact, and as a Friend to the Minister, or to my Country, should join in this Motion, in order to windicate my Friend if innocent, or expose him to the Justice of the Nation if guilty.

' That all the Titles, Honours, Pensions, Places and other Favours of the Crown, have for twenty Years past been disposed of to none but such as voted in Parliament, or at Elections, according to the Direction of the Minister: That within these ten Years several Persons of high Rank and great Merit have been dismissed from all the Offices they held at the Pleasure of the Crown, for no other known or affignable Reason, but because they opposed the Minister in Parliament: That Officers in the Army and Navy who got themselves Seats in this House, and voted as they were bid, have gain'd Preferments out of their Rank, to the Difappointment of Officers of longer Service and greater Merit in their military Capacity: These Things are known to all Men, both within Doors and without; and are of themselves a strong Presumption, if not a certain Proof, that our Minister had a formed Design to overthrow our Constitution, by establishing a corrupt Influence in Parliament.

To tell us, that the King disposes of his Favours himfelf, often without the Advice of the Minister, whose Department they properly belong to, can be of no Weight in this House. By our Constitution the King can do no wrong; but every Minister is answerable to Parliament, if the King by his Advice, does any Thing that is wrong. As soon as he discovers such illegal Practices, he ought to advise the King against it, and if he finds his Master will not take his Advice, he ought directly to throw up his Imployment, and impeach the Minister who has given such wicked Advice to his Sovereign.

'Sir, it is a new Doctrine in this Nation, and abfolutely inconfistent with our Constitution, to tell us, that his Majesty may, and ought, in the Disposal of Offices or Favours, to consider Gentlemens Behaviour in this House. Let his Majesty be never so well convinced of the Wisdom, and Uprightness of his Measures, he ought not to take the least Notice of what is said or done by any particular Man in this House. He is a Traitor to our Constitution that advises his Majesty to do so; and I am forry the Expression fell from the Hon. Gentleman, because it will be supposed that he is conscious, or has heard of something of this Nature being done. If Reports are carried to his Majesty, with Regard to the Behaviour of any particular Gentleman in this House, or at an Election, he ought to do with them as it is said King William did with the Papers of a Plot he had discovered. By peruling one of them, he found Rea- An, 15. Geo. II. fon to suspect some of his Courtiers had been concerned: Whereupon he threw them all into the Flames, that they might not furnish him with Suspicions against those he took to be his Friends. The fame Monarch shewed another Instance of his Generosity, and of his Regard for our Constitution: A Post in the Army having fallen vacant, the Gentleman who had the next Right to it, happened to be a Member of this House, and one that had opposed the Court, which few Officers do now a-days: The Ministers, as usual, were against his Preferment, because he had opposed the King's Measures in Parliament; but the King told them, the Gentleman had always behaved well as an Officer, and he had nothing to do with his Behaviour in Parliament; fo gave him the Commission he had by his Rank a Right to. This was acting like the King of a free People, and it might be expected from him, because he was brought up in a Country where the People had some Rights and Privileges to pretend to. Every Sovereign of these Kingdoms ought to act in the same Manner, he must act so as long as we have an independent Parliament, otherwise he will get no Ministers to serve him, if they have a Regard to their own Safety; for the' by our Constitution our King can do no wrong, and therefore we cannot call him to an Account. yet every Minister is answerable for the King's Behaviour as well as his own, in the Business belonging to his particular Department, and, confequently, is for his own Safety obliged to throw up, if the King does any Thing by himfelf, and without or against his Advice, which seems to be inconfishent with our Constitution.

' Suppose, Sir, a Minister thinks the Measures right, and for the Benefit of the Nation: Suppose they really are so; yet he may be guilty of corrupt Practices in procuring the Approbation of Parliament. If he threatens a Member with the Loss of his Place, or with a Denial in any reasonable Suit he is to make to the Crown, as a Consequence of his opposing that Measure, or what are called the King's Meafures in Parliament: If by his Conduct he shews, that this will be the Consequence of opposing any Court Candidate at Elections, or any Court Measure in Parliament, he is guilty of corrupt Practices; and therefore this Crime is not so much a Crime of the Mind as the Hon. Gentleman imagines; for I do not know of our having ever admitted in this Kingdom the Jesuitical Maxim, That the End justifies the Means, But suppose this Crime to be merely a Crime of the Mind, do not our Common Law Courts often try and punish such Crimes ? Murder is a malicious killing: Malice is a Crime

Ages 5. Geo, II. that confilts in the Mind only; because killing may in itself be an innocent, even a meritorious Action, as in the Case of Self-defence, or killing a Highwayman or Pyrate; yet our Common-Law Courts often try, convict, and punish Men for Murder; and cannot the High Court of Parliament do what is every Day done by a common Judge and Jury?

' Sir, if the young Gentleman had been long in Parliament, he would not have laid so much Stress upon Parliamentary Appropriations, or Accounts deliver'd into Parliament, as he feems to do. Every one who knows how superficially our Estimates and Accounts have been look'd into by Parliament for many Years past, must know, that they can be no Restraint, or but a very slender one, upon a Minifler's Conduct. A future Service may be over-rated in the Estimate, a past Service may be over-charged in the Account, without its being taken the least Notice of by Parliament; and therefore a Minister may purloin considerable Sums from what is appropriated to, and supposed to have been faithfully laid out in the publick Service, and apply them towards his own Use, or, what is worse, towards corrupting the Voters at Elections or in Parliament. The Heffiar * Troops furnished us with an Example of the Possibility of this Practice: A certain Sum was every Year appropriated by Parliament for that Purpose, and Accounts deliver'd in as if it had been annually applied wholly to that Purpose; but, by Accident, it afterwards appeared, that a Part of that Money had been applied to another Use, I mean the Deficiency of the French Subsidy to Denmark, which they had engaged to pay in Consequence of the Treaty of Hanover, and which we were fo generous as to make good, tho' they were certainly more concern'd in Interest in the Consequences of that 'Treaty than Great Britain was, whatever the Electorate of Hanover might be.

'This shews, that the publick Money may be applied to other Uses than those to which it is appropriated, when the Minister has a Majority of this House at his Beck; for tho' this Discovery was made by Accident, it did not occasion so much as a Motion for an Inquiry into the Disposal of the publick Treasure, nor would any such Motion have now been made, I believe, if the Minister's Majority had been as certain in this Parliament as it was in the two last; because Gentlemen have been quite tired out with making Motions for the Benefit of their Country, against a determined Majority in Parliament. This, Sir, likewise shews, that the Multitude of Commissioners and Officers in the Treasury, notwithstanding there being too great a Number of both, An. 15. Geo. II. can no Way endanger the Discovery of any such Misapplication, especially when the first Commissioner there has the Direction of the Secretary's Office, and every other Office in the Kingdom. The other Commissioners, and the Officers, either do not really know how the Money issued by them is applied, or else they will never make a Discovery, as long as they know that their first Commissioner continues to be the chief Favourite of the Crown. This has been the Touch-stone of such Discoveries for many Years past, and always will be so, till we have a Parliament, independent and resolute enough, to pull a suspected Minister even from behind the Throne itself.

' Then, Sir, with regard to the Civil List Revenue, confidering how much of it may be drawn out by his Majesty's Warrant, and that the Auditors are obliged to admit of such Warrants as sufficient Vouchers, I am surprised to hear it faid, that a great Part of it may not be applied towards overturning our Constitution by corrupt Practices, instead of being applied, as it ought, towards supporting the Honour and Dignity of the Crown. Confidering the many Pretences of legal Secret-Sevice Money that may be made by Ministers. the most circumspect Sovereign may be imposed on; and therefore in Parliament it is no Derogation to the Character of the King to treat his Warrants to the Treasury as we treat his Speeches to the Parliament. Tho' the Auditors of the Exchequer are obliged, as they ought to be, to admit his Majetty's Warrants as sufficient Vouchers; yet in this House we ought to look upon them as the Warrants of his Ministers, and consequently, ought to admit of them no farther than they appear reasonable. But what is of much greater Force in the present Question, and I am glad the Hon. Gentleman furnished me with an Opportunity to mention it, is this, it is generally reported without Doors, that his Majefty's Civil List Revenue is greatly in Debt, that many of his Servants and Tradefmen, who ought to be paid quarterly at least, are above a Twelvemonth in Arrear: I have no legal Authority for laying lo, and every one may guels at the Reason why I have not; but I can affirm, and, I believe, most Gentlemen in this House know, that there is such a Report: As this concerns the Honour and Dignity of the Crown, this Report alone obliges us to inquire into it, if we have a Mind to act up to our Character as the Grand Inquest of the Nation. Even a common Inquest does not wait till Informers come to them: If they have the least Intelligence of any Nulance or publick Crime, they fend for fuch Persons as they think can give Information: they examine them in the Vol. XIII. Dd

An. 13. Geo. II. most folemn Manner, and if from thence the Intelligence they had, appears true or probable, they make a Present ment, in order for a Profecution. This Inquiry, even when it goes the length of a Presentment, is no Prosecution: The Persons accused have still an Opportunity to justify themselves; and so they would have in Case of a Parliamentary Inquiry, and even a Report against them, which should make all Gentlemen the more ready to enter into fuch Inquiry; because frequent Inquiries of this Kind, would take away all Hopes of Concealment, and no Man could fuffer without having an Opportunity to justify himself, if inno-

· I hope it will now appear, that from the general Report without Doors, and from the Probability as well as Poffibility of the Fact, we have great Reason to suspect, that the Minister, whose Conduct is now proposed to be inquired into, has, for feveral Years, been carrying on a Defign to overturn our happy Constitution, by illegally applying all the Favours of the Crown, and some Part of the publick Money, towards gaining a corrupt Influence in Parliament and at Elections. If this does not furnish us with a fufficient Cause for setting up a Parliamentary Inquiry into his Conduct, nothing ever did, nothing ever can; and as to the present Time's being proper for that Purpose, I am surprised to hear our present foreign Danger pleaded as a Pretence for delaying that Inquiry, when it is really the strongest Reason for entering upon it directly. Without fuch an Inquiry our Government can recover no Confidence with our People at Home, nor consequently among our antient Allies Abroad; the Recovery of which is absolutely necessary for enabling us to form such a Consederacy as may obviate our foreign Danger. But, say Gentlemen, if you enter into such an Inquiry, you'll have no Time to confider, and take proper Meafures with regard to Foreign Affairs. Sir, in this House, we have nothing to do with the Direction of foreign Affairs, except when we have such Ministers as have, by their former Conduct, shewn they ought not to be trusted, which cannot be the Case of our new Ministers: On the other hand, those to whom his Majesty intrusts the Direction of our foreign Affairs, have nothing or very little to do with the Inquiries of this House, unless they are resolved to screen the Guilty, which, I am fure, none of them will pretend to, or at least openly avow; therefore, these two Affairs can neither interfere nor interrupt one another; and, I believe, the Supplies necessary for carrying into Execution the foreign Measures his Majesty may resolve on, will be more readily agreed to in this House, and more chearfully advanced by the People, if it be found, that we are in earnest, An. 15. Geo. II, and resolved to go through with an Inquiry: Whereas, the granting of them will otherwise meet with great Obstructions in this House, and the raising of them with great Grumblings among the People; so that if we have a Mind to save Time with regard to our foreign Affairs, we ought to enter into the Inquiry now proposed, because, in every other Respect, it will make the publick Business go on without Interruption, either within Doors or without.

Thus, Sir, every Argument that has been advanced against the Motion now before you, appears, upon due Consideration, to be an Argument in its Favour. This is my Opinion: I hope, I have shewn sufficient Ground for it, and therefore, I shall most heartily concur with the noble Lord in his Motion.'

Mr Cooke spoke as follows:

Mr Cooke.

· As I never had any Share in the Conduct of our publick Affairs, it cannot be supposed, that I have any Reason, upon my own Account, for opposing an Inquiry; and as I have but lately come into the World, and cannot pretend to be much acquainted with the Nature of State Affairs, it is with great Diffidence I offer to give my Opinion in a Question of fuch Importance; especially when I see so many Gentlemen, whose Judgment and Candour I am so well convinced of, declare against the Opinion I am to give. If I thought there was at present any just Cause for an Inquiry of any Kind, and that the present is a proper Time for it, I am sure no Gentleman could more heartily concur in this Motion than I should; but after all that has been said in this, and former Debates upon the same Subject. I must freely declare, that, in my Opinion, we have no just Cause for an Inquiry of any Kind; and, I think, an Inquiry at this critical Time could be attended with no Benefit, and might be the Cause of inevitable Ruin to our Country.

The Suspicions, Murmurs, or Complaints without Doors, and the Sort of People among whom they prevail, are general Facts which can admit of no Evidence. We might as well pretend to prove, that the Majority of the People are of a brown or a fair Complexion. Such Facts must depend upon every particular Gentleman's own Judgment and Knowledge, and can never be urged with any Weight by one Gentleman for convincing another; therefore I cannot think, that these of the People without Doors, can ever properly be made use of in this House as an Argument for an Inquiry. We ought upon all Occasions to enter into the Reason of 1741.

An. 15. Geo. II. Things: If the Conduct of our publicle Affairs has been wrong, no Matter whether it is complained of or no, we ought to inquire into it even tho' it had been, and was fill approved of by the Generality of People without Doors, The Measures of the last Administration of Queen Anne were very generally approved of by the People, at least by those we commonly call the Mob: They continued to be so even after his late Majesty's Accession; yet, nevertheless, the Parliament not only inquired into those Measures, but impeached or attainted most of the Chief Ministers. On the other hand, if we think the Measures have been right in the main, we ought not to trouble ourselves, or disturb the Nation, with an Inquiry, notwithstanding any Clamours that may have been raifed against them; and therefore, when an Inquiry is moved for, we ought never to confider what is faid or suspected without Doors, but what appears to us within.

"Gentlemen tell us, they suspect, that for several Years past all the Fayours of the Crown, and large Sums of publick Money, have been applied, towards gaining a corrupt Influence in Parliament and at Elections; but they have offered no Proof nor any one Fact as a Foundation for this Sufpicion. except that of his Majesty's displacing two or three Officers in his Army; and even in this Cafe, they do not positively affert, that those Officers were displaced for opposing the King's Measures in Parliament, or that this was ever given as a Reason either by the King or by any of his Ministers. Sir, would you take from the Crown the Power of preferring or cashiering Officers in the Army? If you do, I am sure. you will foon have neither Obedience nor Discipline in your Army. Nay, some General Officer of great Credit in the Army might very probably, in a short Time, set up a military Government. I cannot therefore think, that Gentlemen defign to take from the Crown the absolute Power of preferring or cashiering the Officers of our Army; and yet this would be the certain Confequence of making such a Fact as this the Foundation of a Parliamentary Inquiry into the Conduct of any Minister.

' I must therefore think, that, whatever Gentlemen may in this Case suspect, their Suspicion is without Foundation; and with regard to the Disposal of publick Money, it is still a more groundless; for here they have not mention'd so much as one Fact, no, nor the least particular Circumstance, whereon fach a Sufpicion as they pretend to have, can be founded: and from the Nature of Things it is, in my Opinion, evident, that no fuch Thing can be practifed. The Law paffed but a few Years ago, for preventing Bribery and Corruption * at Elections, has rendered this Practice absolutely im An. 15. Geo. II. possible, or at least so dangerous, that no Minister in his Senses will attempt it. By that Law, every Elector, at every Election, is to swear, that he has not received by himfelf or by any Person in Trust for him, directly or indirectly, any Sum or Sums of Money, Office, Place, or Imployment, Gift or Reward, or any Promise or Security for any such, in order to give his Vote at that Election; and if he swears falsely, he thereby incurrs the Pains and Penalties inflicted by Law in Cases of wilful and corrupt Perjury. By another Clause in the same Act, every Elector who shall receive or take any Money or other Reward, by Way of Gift, Loan, or other Device, or agree or contract for any Money, Gift, Office, Imployment, or other Reward whatfoever, to give his Vote, or to forbear giving his Vote at any Election; or if any Person by himself, or any Person employed by him, shall by any Gift or Reward, or by any Promise, Agreement or Security for any Gift or Reward, corrupt, or procure any Person to give his Vote, or to forbear to give his Vote at any Election; the Offender, that is to fay, the Corruptor as well as the Corrupted, shall for every Offence forfeit 500 l. besides being for ever after disabled to hold any Office or Franchise. And by a third Clause, any Offender against that Act, who shall, within twelve Months, discover and convict any other Offender, is himfelf indemnified and discharged from all Penalties and Disabilities incurred by his Offence against that Act.

This, Sir, is the Substance of that Act: I have not troubled you with having it read, because of its having been fo lately passed; but as Gentlemen seem, in these our Days. to be full of Suspicions, if any one suspects that I have not recited faithfully, he may have the Act itself read at your Table; and from this Act I must desire Gentlemen to confider, what a Condition a Minister would be in, that should attempt to convert the publick Money, or even the Offices or Imployments in the Disposal of the Crown, towards gaining a corrupt Influence at most of our Elections. He must for this Purpose imploy a great Number of Agents, and Under Agents and all of them must be Persons of low Rank and mean Condition; for confidering the Penalties, no Man of Character or Fortune would be employed. Thus he must perpetually lie at the Mercy of Scoundrels, who might obtain an Indemnity for themselves, and very probably a high Reward, by informing against him. Is this a Condition any Minister of common Sense would chuse to be in? Would it be possible for him to carry on such a Practice for any Number of Years.

See the Debate on this Bill, which was passed by a Majority of two Voices only, in Chandler's History Anno 1729. P. 49.

As 25. Geo. 17, without fo much as one Information against him or any of J741. his Agents?

' Now, Sir, if the Suspicions, upon which, and upon which alone, this Motion is founded, are themselves without any Foundation, must we not agree, that the Motion itself has no real Foundation? and, consequently, that we have no just Cause for any such Inquiry as is now proposed? For as to the Civil List's being under Suspicion of Debt, we have no Call to inquire into that Affair till an Application be made to us for supplying the Deficiency. Contingencies may run the Civil List Revenue behind hand, but if his Majesty is so good as to resolve to make up the Deficiency by a future Saving, I must think, we have nothing to do with it; and if we should inquire into it, I think, his Majesty would be in the right to infift upon our making the Deficiency good, in order to make us pay for our Officiousness.

But suppose we had good Reason to suspect Misconduct or Misdemeanors in the late Management of our publick Affairs, the present would be a very improper Time to inquire into them, because it is impossible to inquire into the Conduct of any Minister of State, without discovering Secrets which our Enemies might make great Use of against us. Even the noble Lord whose Conduct is now proposed to be inquired into, as one of his Majesty's Privy Council, must have had some hand at least in advising most, if not all our foreign Measures, so that such a general Inquiry into his Conduct, as is now proposed, would lead us of course into an Inquiry into all our late publick Measures both foreign and domestick. And moreover, by the very Nature of the Office he was in, he must have had the Issuing of all Sums applied to secret Service, consequently an Inquiry into his Conduct would necessarily lead us into an Inquiry, what Sums were issued for that Purpose, when they were issued, and how they were applied; which would certainly discover many of the Secrets of our Government, and such as it might be of great Importance to our Enemies to know. For this Reason, Sir, I must be against a general Inquiry into the Conduct of this or any other Minister of State, at a Time when we are engaged in one dangerous War, and upon the Verge, perhaps, of engaging in another.

'To these Reasons I must add, Sir, that, whatever other Gentlemen may think of the Time proposed by this Motion to be inquired into, I must think, it would be very hard to bring a Minister to a general Account for so many Years past, especially considering the many large Sums that must have passed through his Hands in that Time. As Estimates and Accounts of all publick Monies were regularly delivered into Parliament, and those Estimates and Accounts as regularly An. 15, Geo. HA approved of by Parliament, he had Reason to look upon that Approbation as an annual Discharge; and that therefore he had no Occasion to be very exact and careful in preferving the Vouchers, or in making Memorandums of the Uses to which those large Sums were respectively applied; confequently we must suppose, that many of the Vouchers are now loft, and that he has forgot many publick Transactions which required a large Expence. For this Reason, I must join with an Hon. Gentleman who spoke against the last Motion of this Nature we had before us, in thinking, that it would be as unjust to call this Minister to a general Account for ten Years back, as it would be to make a Steward come to a new Account, notwithstanding his having settled his Accounts yearly, and delivered up his Vouchers. This, I think. would in private Life be both unjust and oppressive, and as I think it would be equally so with regard to a Minister, therefore I cannot agree to the Motion.

convenient

As the Hon. Gentleman, who spoke lately against this Motion, has not been long in this House, one ought in Charity to believe, there is some Sincerity in the Professions he makes, of his being ready to agree to a Parliamentary Inquiry, when he fees Cause and a convenient Time for it; but if he knew how often those Professions have been made by those who, upon all Occasions, have opposed every Kind of Inquiry, he would fave himself the Trouble of making any fuch, because they are believed to be sincere by very few. within Doors or without. He may, 'tis true, have no Occalion, upon his own Account, to be afraid of an Inquiry of any Sort; but when a Gentleman has contracted a Friendship, or any of his near Relations have contracted a Friendthip for one who may be brought into Danger by an Inquiry, it is very natural to suppose, that such a Gentleman's Opposition to an Inquiry does not proceed entirely from Motives of a publick Nature; and if that Gentleman follows the Advice of some of his Friends, I very much question, if he will ever fee Caufe, or a convenient Time, for an Inquiry into the late Conduct of our publick Affairs. As a Parliamentary Inquiry must always be founded upon Sufricions, and not upon known Facts, or manifett Crimes, it will always be easy to find Reasons or Pretences for averring those Suspicious to be groundless; and upon the Principle that a Parliamentary Inquiry must necessarily lay open the Secrets of our Government, no Time can ever be proper or _ An. 15, Geo. II, convenient for such an Inquiry; because it is impossible to 1741. Suppose a Time when our Government can have no Secreta

"This, Sir, would be a most convenient Doctrine for Ministers, because it would put an End to all Parliamentary Inquiries into the Conduct of our publick Affairs; and therefore, when I hear it urged, and fo much infifted on by a certain Set of Gentlemen in this House, I must suppose their Hopes to be very extensive: I must suppose them to expect, that they and their Posterity will for ever continue to be Ministers, which, if possible, would be more fatal to it than their having so long continued to be so. But this Doctrine has been so often contradicted by Experience, that I am surprised to hear Gentlemen insist upon it. Even this very Session has afforded us a convincing Proof, how little Foundation there is for faying, that a Parliamentary Inquiry must necessarily discover the Secrets of our Government. Surely, in a War with Spain, which must be carried on chiefly by Sea, if our Government have any Secrets, the Lords of the Admiralty must be intrusted with the most important of them; yet we have in this very Sellion, and without any Secret Committee too, made an Inquiry into the Conduct of the Lords Commissioners of our Admiralty: We have not only inquired into their Conduct, but we have censured it in such a Manner, as has put an End to the fame * Commissioners being any longer intrusted with the Direction of that Branch of the publick Bufinels. Has that Inquiry discovered any of the Secrets of our Government? On the contrary, the Committee found they had no Occasion to dive into any of the Secrets of our Government: They found Cause enough for Censure without it; and none of the Commissioners pretended to justify their Conduct by Papers, containing Secrets which ought not to be discovered.

This, Sir, is so late and so strong a Proof of there being no necessary Connection between a Parliamentary Inquiry and a Discovery of Secrets, which it behoves the Nation to conceal, that, I hope, Gentlemen will no longer insist upon this Danger as an Argument against the Inquiry now proposed, which, of all others, is the least liable to this Objection. The First Commissioner of the Treasury has nothing to do with the Application of Secret Service Money: He is only to take Care, that it be regularly issued from his Office, and that no more shall be issued upon that Head, than

according to the then Conjuncture of Affairs may feem to An. 15. Good II. be necessary; as to the particular Application, it properly belongs to the Secretaries of State, or fuch other Persons as his Majetty shall employ; so that we cannot suppose, the Inquiry proposed will discover any Secrets relating to the Application of that Money, unless the Noble Lord has acted as Secretary of State, as well as First Commissioner of the Treasury, or unless a great Part of the Money, drawn out for Secret Services, has been delivered to himfelf, or to Perfons employed by him, and applied by him or them towards gaining a corrupt Influence in Parliament, and at Elections. Both thefe, indeed, he is most grievously suspected of, and both are Secrets which it very much behoves him to have concealed, but it equally behoves the Nation to have them both revealed. His Country and he are, I shall grant, in this Cause, equally, tho' oppositely, concern'd; for the Safety or Ruin of one or t'other depends upon the Fate of the Question; and, in my Opinion, the violent Opposition made to this Motion, adds great Strength to the Suspicion,

I shall admit, Sir, that the Noble Lord, whose Conduct is now proposed to be inquired into, was one of his Majesty's most Hon. Privy Council, and that consequently he must have had a Share at least in advising all the Measures we have purfued, both Abroad and at Home; but I cannot admit, that therefore, an Inquiry into his Conduct must necessarily occasion a Discovery of any Secrets that may be of dangerous Consequence to the Nation; because we are not to inquire into the Measures themselves, or into the Wildom or Uprightness of them, and consequently, can have no Call to look into any of the Government's Secrets relating to them. This has nothing to do with an Inquiry into his Conduct; but there are several Suspicions spread Abroad relating to his Conduct as a Privy Councellor, which, if true, would be of the last Importance to the Nation to have difcovered. It has been strongly afferted, that he was not only a Privy Councellor, but had usurped the whole and sole Direction of his Majesty's Privy Council: It has been asserted that he gave the Spanish Court the first Hint of the unjust Claim they afterwards fet up against our South-Sea Company, which was one of the chief Caufes of the War between the two Nations: And it has been afferted, that this very Minister has given Advice to the French, what Measures to take upon several Occasions, in order to bring our Court into their Measures; particularly, that he advised them to fend the numerous Army they have this last Summer sent into Wellphalia. What Truth there is in these Assertions, I shall not pretend to answer: The Facts are of such a Nature, Vol. XIII. Еe

An. 15. Geo. II. and they must have been perpetrated with so much Caution and Secrecy, that it will be difficult to bring them to Light, even by a Parliamentary Inquiry; but the very Suspicion is Ground enough for setting up such an Inquiry, and for carrying it on with the utmost Strictness and Vigour; which leads me to consider the Cause we now have for an Inquiry.

' Upon this Subject, Sir, I must say, I am a good deal furprised to hear the Representatives of the People make so light of the Sentiments or Suspicions of the People. That there are Suspicions and Complaints among the People, and among the Generality of the best Sort of People, is, 'tis true, a Fact we cannot eafily prove against one that denies it; no more than we could do, that the Generality of our People are of a fair or a brown Complexion; but if I should fay that the Majority of our People are Whites, I could not prove what I afferted, and yet I should look upon him as a very whimfical, or a very difingenuous Gentleman, that would deny it, and affert that the Majority of our People were Blackamores. Such Facts it is impossible to prove any other Way but by the Opinion of those who are the belt Judges; and furely a Country-Gentleman, who lives most Part of his Time among the People, and has no Court Favours to bestow, as a Temptation for those he converies with to disguise their Sentiments, is a better Judge than one who feldom flirs out of the Purlieus of a Court, and converses with none but such as expect Places or Preferments by his Favour. Therefore, if we judge of this Fact according to the only Evidence that can be had, that is, according to the Opinion of those who are the best Judges, we must conclude. that the Suspicions and Complaints of the People were never more general than they are against the late Conduct of our publick Affairs; and this, by me, shall always be deemed a sufficient Cause for a Parliamentary Inquiry.

Whatever my Opinion of past Measures may be, I shall never be so vain, or so bigotted to my own Opinion, as without any Inquiry to determine against the Majority of my Countrymen. If I sound the publick Measures generally condemned, let my private Opinion of them be never so favourable, I should be for an Inquiry, in order to convince the People of their Error, or at least to surnish mysfelf with the most authentick Arguments for the Opinion I have embrac'd. The Desire of bringing other People into our Sentiments is so natural to Mankind, that I shall always suspect the Candour of those who, in Politicks or Religion, are against a free Inquiry. Besides, Sir, when the Complaints of the People are general against an Administration, or against any particular Minister, an Inquiry is a Daty

we owe to our Sovereign as well as the People. We meet An. 15. Geo. II. here to communicate to our Sovereign the Sentiments of his People: We meet here to redress the Grievances of the People. By performing our Duty in these two Respects, we shall always be able to establish the Throne of our Sovereign in the Hearts of his People, and to prevent the People's being led into Infurrections or Rebellions by Mifrepresentations or false Surmises. When the People complain, they must be in the right or in the wrong. If they are in the right, we are in Duty bound to inquire into the Conduct of the Ministers, and punish those who shall appear to have been the most guilty: If the People are in the wrong, we ought to inquire into the Conduct of our Ministers, in order to be able to convince the People, that they have been milled. We ought not therefore, in any Question about an Inquiry, to be governed by our own Sentiments: We must be governed by the Sentiments of our Constituents, if we are resolved to perform our Duty, either as true Representatives of the People, or as faithful Messengers to our Sovereign. I will agree with the Hon. Gentleman, that if we are convinced, or suspect the publick Measures to be wrong, we ought to inquire into them, even tho' they are not much complained of by the People without Doors; but I cannot agree with him in thinking, that notwithslanding the Administration, or a Minister's being complained of by the People in general without Doors, we ought not to inquire into his Conduct, unless we are ourselves convinced that his Meafores have been wrong. Without an Inquiry we can no more determine this Question, than a Judge can declare a Man innocent of any Crime laid to his Charge without a previous Trial or Inquisition. Common Fame is a sufficient Ground for an Inquisition at Common Law, and, for the same Reason, the general Voice of the People of England, ought always to be look'd on as a sufficient Ground for a Parliamentary Inquiry.

But, say Gentlemen, what is this Minister accused of? What Crime is laid to his Charge? For unless some Misfortune can be faid to have happened, or some Crime to have been committed, no Inquiry ought to be fet on foot. Sir, the ill Posture of our Affairs both abroad and at home : The melancholy Situation we are in: The Distress we are now reduced to, is of itself a sufficient Cause for an Inquiry, even supposing he were accused of no particular Crime or Misconduct. The Nation lies a bleeding, perhaps expiring: The Balance of Power has received a deadly Blow: Shall we acknowledge this to be the Case, and shall we not inquire whether it has happened by Mischance, or by the 1741 Ee2

An. 15, Geo. U. Misconduct, or perhaps the Malice prepense of our Minister here at home? Before the Treaty of Utrecht, it was the general Opinion, that in a few Years of Peace, we should be able to pay off most of our Debts: We have now been very near thirty Years in profound Peace, at least we have never been engaged in any War, but what we unnecessarily brought upon ourselves; and yet our Debts are near as great as they were when that Treaty was concluded. Is not this a Miffortune, and shall we make no Inquiry how this Missortune

. I am surprised to hear it said, that no Inquiry ought to be fet on Foot, unless some publick Crime be known to have been committed. The Suspicion of any such Crime's having been actually committed, has always been deem'd a fushcient Reason for setting up an Inquiry. Is there not a Suspicion, that the publick Money has been applied towards gaining a corrupt Influence at Elections? Is it not become a common Expression, to say, The Floodgates of the Treafury are opened against a general Election? I shall defire no more than that every Gentleman who is conscious of this having been done, either for them or against them, would give his Vote in Favour of this Motion. Will any Gentleman say, this is not a Crime, when even private Corruption has such high Penalties inslicted upon it by express Statote? A Minister that commits this Crime, and makes use of the publick Money for that Purpole, adds Thieving and Breach of Truth to the Crime of Corruption; and as the Crime, when committed by him, is of much more dangerous Consequence to our Constitution than when committed by a private Man, it becomes more properly the Subject of a Parliamentary Inquiry, and ought to be more severely punished. The Hon. Gentleman may much more reasonably tell us, that Porteous was never murder'd by the Mob at Edinburgh, because no Discovery of his Murderers could ever yet be made, notwithstanding the high Reward, as well as Pardon, offered, than to tell us, we cannot suppose that our Minister ever, by himself or his Agents, corrupted an Election, because no Information has as yet been brought against him; for nothing but a Pardon upon convicting the Offender has ever yet been offered in this Cafe, and how could any Informer expect fuch a Pardon, much less a Reward, when he knew, that the very Man against whom he was to inform, had not only the Distribution of all publick Rewards, but the packing of a Jury or Parliament against him? Sir, whilst fuch a Minister preserves the Favour of the Crown, and thereby the Exercise of it's Power, we can never expect such an Information: Even Malice itself can never provoke such an Information; because, like An. 15. Geo. II.

all other Sorts of impotent Malice, it will rebound upon the Heart that conceived it.

This shews the Insignificancy of the Act mentioned by the Hoa. Gentleman, with regard to that Sort of Corruption which is properly called Bribery; and with regard to the other Sort of Corruption, which confills in giving or taking away those Posts, Pensions, or Preserments, which depend upon the arbitrary Will of the Crown, this Act is flill more inlignificant; because it is not necessary, it would even be ridiculous in a Minister to tell any Man, that he gave or refused him a Post, Pension, or Preferment, on account of his voting for or against any Ministerial Measure in Parliament, or any Ministerial Candidate at an Election. If he makes it his constant Rule never to give a Post, Pension. or Preferment, but to those who vote for his Measures and his Candidates, and makes a few Examples of difmiffing those who vote otherwise, it will have the same Effect as when he declares it openly. Will any Gentleman fay, that this has not been the Practice of the Minister whose Conduct is now proposed to be inquired into? Has he not declared in the Face of this House, that he will continue to make this his Practice? And will not this have the same Effect. as if he went separately and distinctly to every particular Man, and told him in express Terms, Sir, If you vote for fuch a Measure, or such a Candidate, you shall have the first Preferment in the Gift of the Crown; if you vote otherwife, you must not expect to keep what you have. Gentlemen may deny the Sun shines at Noon-Day, but if they have any Eyes, and do not wilfully shut them, or turn their Back towards him, I am fure no Man will believe they are ingenuous in what they say; and therefore, I must think, the Hon. Gentleman was in the right who endeavoured to justify this Practice: It was more candid than to deny it; but as his Arguments have already been fully an-(wered, I shall add nothing upon that Subject.

Gendemen cry out, What! will you take from the Crown the Power of preferring or cashiering the Officers of our Army! No, Sir, this is neither the Design, nor will it be the Effect of our agreeing to this Motion. The King has at present an absolute Power of preferring or cashiering the Officers of our Army. It is a Prerogative he may make use of for the Benesit or Safety of the Publick; but like other Prerogatives, it may be made a wrong Use of, and the Minister is answerable to Parliament when it is. When an Officer is preferred or cashiered, upon the Motive of his voting for or against any Court Measure or Candidate, it is a wrong

In. 15. Geo. II. Use of this Prerogative, for which the Minister is answerable. We may judge; we must judge from Circumstances or outward Appearances: From these we may condemn; and. I hope, we have still a Power to punish any Minister that shall dare advise the King to prefer or cashier upon such a Motive. Whether this Prerogative ought to remain as it is, without any Limitation, is a Question that has nothing to do in this Debate; but I must observe, that the Argument made use of for it, might with equal Weight be made use of for giving our King an absolute Power over every Man's Property; for a large Property will always give the Possessor a Command over a great Number of Men, whom he may arm and discipline if he pleases: I know of no Law for restraining it: I hope, there never will be any such; and I wish, our Gentlemen of Estates would make more use of this Power than they do, because it would contribute towards keeping our domestick as well as our foreign Enemies in Awe. For my Part, I think, a Gentleman who has earned his Commission by his Services, (in his military Capacity, I mean) or bought it with his Money, has as much a Property in it. as any Man has in his Effate, and ought to have it as well fecured by the Laws of his Country: Whilst it remains at the absolute Will of the Crown, he must be a Slave to the Minister, unless he has some other Estate to depend on; and if the Officers of our Army long continue in that State of Slavery in which they are at present, I am afraid, it will make Slaves of us all.

for The only Method we have for preventing this fatal Confequence, as the Law now stands, is to make the best and most constant. Use of the Power we have, as Members of this House, to prevent any Minister's daring to advise the King to make a bad Use of this Prerogative; and as there is such a strong Suspicion, that this Minister has done so, we ought certainly to inquire into it, not only for the sake of Punishing him, if guilty, but as a Terror to all suture Ministers.

This, Sir, may therefore be justly reckoned among the many other sufficient Causes for the Inquiry proposed; and the Suspicion of the Civil List's being greatly in Debt is another; for if it is, it must either have been misapplied or profusely thrown away, which it is our Duty both to prevent and punish. It is inconsistent with the Honour of this Nation to have our King stand indebted to his Servants or Tradesmen, who may be ruined by a Delay of Payment: The Parliament has provided sufficiently for preventing this Dishonour's being brought upon the Nation; and if the Provision we have made should be misapplied or lavished, we must supply the Desciency, we ought to do it, whether the King makes any Application for that Purpole or no; and the Reason is An, 15. Geo. II, very plain, because, as we ought first to inquire into the Management of that Revenue, and punish those who have occasioned the Desiciency, they will certainly chuse to leave the Creditors of the Crown, and the Honour of the Nation, in a State of Suffering, rather than advise the King to make an Application which will bring their Conduct into Question, and themselves, probably, to condign Punishment. Beside this, Sir, there is at present another Reason, still stronger for promoting an Inquiry. As there is a great Suspicion, that the publick Money has been applied towards corrupting Voters at Elections and in Parliament, if the Civil List be in Debt, it gives Reason to presume, that some Part of this Revenue has, under the Pretence of Secret Service Money,

' I shall conclude, Sir, with a few Remarks upon the last Argument made Use of against the Inquiry proposed. It has been faid, that the Minister delivered in his Accounts annually: That those Accounts have been annually passed and approved of by Parliament; and that therefore it would be unjust to call him now to a general Account, because the Vouchers may be now loft, or many expensive Transactions have flipt out of his Memory. 'Tis true, Sir, Estimates and Accounts have been annually delivered in: The Forms of Proceeding made that necessary; but were any of those Estimates or Accounts ever properly inquired into? Were not all Questions for that Purpose rejected by the Minister's Friends in Parliament? Has not the Parliament always taken them upon Trust, and passed them without Examination? Can such a superficial passing, to call it no worse, be deem'd a Reason for not calling him to a new and general Account? If the Steward, to an Infant's Estate, should annually, for 20 Years together, deliver in his Accounts to the Guardians; and if the Guardians, through Negligence, or for a Share of the Plunder, should annually pass his Accounts without any Examination, or at least without any Objection, would that be a Reason for saying, that it would be unjust in the Infant to call his Steward to an Account when he came of Age? Especially if that Steward had built and furnished sumptuous Palaces, and had, during the whole Time, lived at a much greater Expence than his visible Income could afford, and yet, nevertheless had amassed great Riches. The Publick, Sir, is always in a State of Infancy; therefore no Prescription can be pleaded against it, nor even a general Release, if there appears the least Cause to suspect, that it was furreptitiously obtained: Publick Vouchers ought always to remain upon Record, nor ought there to be any

An. 15. Geo. II. publick Expence without a proper Voucher; therefore. the Case of the Publick is still stronger than that of any Infant. Thus the Hon. Gentlemen, who made Use of this Objection, must see of how little Avail it can be in the Case now before us, and consequently, I hope, we shall have their Concurrence in the Question.'

Secrecy, acquainted the House, that Mr Nichelas Paxton, Paxton's refusing Solicitor of the Treasury, having been examined upon Oath, to answer before did refuse to answer the Questions put to him by the Committee; Hereupon it was moved, that he be committed to the Custody of the Serjeant at Arms, and debarred the Use of Paper, Pen, and Ink. On this Motion a warm Debate arose. On the one Side it was urged, 'That except the House was made acquainted with the Questions that had been proposed, it was impossible to judge whether they had been properly put or not; and therefore they could not judge of the Offence, for it was possible that the Questions were of such a Nature as might involve himself, and no Man was obliged to turn his own Accuser.'

On the other Side it was argued, 'That if the House was to be made acquainted with every Question that the Secret Committee might, in Course of their Inquiry, propose, it was no longer a Secret Committee; that its Design was lost, and that as nothing was more common than to examine and confine a Man by a Warrant from a fingle Secretary of State, so it was not to be presumed that 21 Gentlemen, whom the Commons of Great Britain had reposed so much Considence in, would have less Discretion, or propose any Thing improper.' Then the Question being put upon the Motion, the same was agreed to, Ayes 197, Noes 136. attody.

The next Day the Serjeant at Arms was order'd to bring An. 15. Geo. Ionies, Foreigners have had the principal Benefit of our Plantations, and the British and Irish are, in a great Meafure, cut off from this Market abroad; that by discontinuing the Drawbacks on foreign Linen carried to our American Settlements, the present Spirit for promoting this Manufacture would be enlarged; that as the Increase of our Home-Manufactures has within these ten or twelve Years reduced the Price of foreign Linens from 10 to 15 per Cent. there is good Ground to believe, that such farther Improvements may be made, as that there would be little or no Debate on the Occasion for importing foreign Linen. This Petition was Report of the referr'd to the above Committee.

Mr Francis Fane reported from the Committee of Supply transferringseven. the Resolution of Yesterday, whereupon Mr Phillips flood Irish Regiments up, and spoke to the following Effect:

I attended Yesterday, in the best Manner I could, to the Mr Phillips. Arguments that were used in the Committee of the whole House, in Favour of the Troops now under your Consideration; and they were drawn either from the Necessity of fupplying the Queen of Hungary, in order to preserve the Balance of Power in Europe, or from the Fear of an Invafion from some foreign Power, in the Absence of the 16,000 Men, that his Majelly has ordered to be fent into Flanders. As to the Queen of Hungary, I believe, this House is unanimous in their Opinion, that the ought to be supported; and if the Question had been, whether the Troops should be fent abroad, to her Affillance, or not, that Argument would have been proper; but has no Relation at all to the present Question. His Majesty has, without advising with his Parliament, thought fit to order those Troops to embark, and that Matter is not now under our Confideration; but, I hope, his Ministers are satisfied, that the Dutch and Hanover Troops will act in Concert with those Troops; the Embarleation will then be highly proper and justifiable, but otherwife mad and unaccountable.

As to the Arguments drawn from the Fear of an Invafion, I cannot think Gentlemen were in earnest when they made use of them. Our Navy must be in a prosound Sleep, and our Ministers void of Intelligence, if they fuffer Spain to approach our Coails; and as to France, her Finances are

' It was faid, a Necessity might arise of sending more Troops abroad; if fo, will it not be Time enough to fend Troops abroad directly from Ireland, when that Necessity appears, and cannot they be foon replaced by new raifed Troops here? What Argument then can be used for taking into our Pay this additional Number of Troops? None but what prevailed in the Time of the late Administration, but which, I was in Hopes, would have died with them, That it is always necessary to keep up a large standing Army in England; a dangerous Doctrine! and I will venture to say. that whoever advises a British King to delight in a flanding Army, is an Enemy to his Country, as it tends to enflave the People, and inflead of being a Security to the Crown, alienates the Affections of the Subject, and creates Murmurings and lealousies; for when People feel, they will complain. And I cannot help expressing the great Surprize I was under Yesterday, to hear so many Gentlemen that are professed Friends to Liberty, Advocates for the Increase of our Army. The Supplies already granted amount to above five Millions three hundred and eight Thousand Pounds; the Embarkation of the Troops as they consist of so many Horse and Dra-" goons, will greatly increase that Sum; and, I am fore, this to Nation is not in a Condition to be at any Expence that is not ... abiolutely necessary for its Safety. That these 4000 Men are necessary for that End, I cannot at all believe, and therefore, mult give my Negative to them.

' The Hon. Gentleman that made the Motion Yesterday in the Committee, * was pleased to say, that when the 16,000 Men are embarked, you would not have above 11,000 Men lest in the Kingdom. I am satisfied a less Number will be sufficient in our present Circumstances for the Security of the Kingdom; but I beg Leave to take Notice, that the 1600 Men that are coming over from Minorca, instead of those that are to be fent there, are not included in that Number, neither are the Marines, and tho many of these are abroad, yet they are not all; I am sure many of the Officers are at home, and they might foon raise Men to ferve in Place of those that we have been obliged to send to help to man the Fleet. Shall we never have done increasing the Forces? An Army of 66,000 Men is inconsistent with the Constitution, and must one Day rain it. I was in hopes the Redreffing of Grievances would at least have kept Pace An. 15. Geo. 11. with the granting of Supplies; but, alas! the one has quite 1742. distanced the other; and the great Expectations from this Parliament will, I fear, end in nothing, but granting more Forces and more Money, than has been granted in any Parliament within the so much talked of Period of twenty Years past.'

Mr Winnington.

Sir

In all Countries, especially in this, the People expect to be protected by their Government, they expect to be secured even from the Approach of Danger, and yet they grudge every Expence which becomes necessary for that Purpose: This renders it popular to oppose all publick Measures, because every publick Measure must be attended with a publick Expence; and this very often, I believe, creates a Prejudice in Gentlemen who are fond of Popularity, which makes them judge amis of almost every Measure, and every Precaution that can be taken by the Government. It is to this Prejudice that I must impute the Opposition which the Measure now under our Consideration has met with; for if we confider it impartially, and without Prejudice, there can nothing, I think, appear more prudent or more reasonable. That the Queen of Hungary. ought to be supported, that she ought to be affished, has been for some Time almost the universal Cry of this Nation: We ought, they say, to assist her, not only in Consequence of our Engagements but in order to preserve ourselves, by maintaining the Balance of Power. Whether I concur in this general Opinion, it is not now necessary to declare; but now when it is resolved to send Troops to her Assistance, and some of those Troops are, for our domestick Security, to be replaced by others, Gentlemen begin to find Fault with both these Measures, because both must be attended with a publick Expence.

We are told, that it will be mad and unaccountable to fend our Troops abroad, unless we are well affured that those Troops will be joined by the Troops of some other Powers. Suppose we were not sure of being joined by the Troops of any other Power in Europe, except those of the Queen of Hungary herself, yet I cannot think it would be either mad or unaccountable to send a large Body of Troops over to Flanders; because it will shew, that we are not only willing, but ready to join with those other Powers of Europe, who have certainly as great an Interest, and ought to have an equal Concern for preserving a Balance of Power in Europe. There are several States and Princes in Europe, who at present affect a Neutrality, and yet we cannot suppose, they

An. 15. Geo. 11, are quite easy at seeing the House of Bourbaz giving Laws to the Princes of Germany, and appropriating to itself the greatest Part of Italy. Even the Princes of Germany themfelves, who at prefent continue neutral, and, perhaps, fome of those who are now joned in Alliance with France, may be prevailed on to join in a Confederacy for pulling down, or at least for prescribing Bounds to the overgrown Power of that Monarchy, as foon as they fee the Armies of Britian upon the Continent, and ready to protect them against that Power which, in their present Situation, they find they cannot refift. This is an Effect which this Nation has, I am fure, great Reason to wish for; and as the transporting a Body of our Troops to Flanders, will be attended but with a very fmall additional Expence, and can be attended with no other Inconvenience, I think, it is worth our while to make the Trial, even tho' we be not previously assured, that either the Dutch, or any other State in Europe, will join their Troops with ours, or enter into any Confederacy for the Support of the Queen of Hungary, or for limiting the ambitious Views of the House of Bourbon,

From hence, I hope, Sir, it will appear, that the Embarkation of our Troops can in no Cale be deemed mad or unaccountable; but when we fend our Troops out of the Kingdom, it would certainly be both mad and unaccountable to leave this Island destitute of a sufficient Number of Troops for its Defence, and for fecuring its domestick Tranquility. Whatever others may think of the disaffected Party amongst us, I have so great an Attachment to our present happy Establishment, and to the Royal Family now upon our Throne, that I am still jealous of that Party, and apprehensive of their Power. True Love, they say, is always mixed with Jealoufy; and this makes me dread every Opportunity, the Difaffected may think they have got, for putting their Defigns in Execution. There are still many Gentlemen of Figure and Fortune amongst us, who openly profess their Attachment to the Pretender: There is a Sort of enthufiaffical Spirit of Difaffection that fill prevails among the Vulgar; and, I am afraid, there is by far too great a Number of Men of all Ranks and Conditions, who now feem to be true Friends to the Protestant Succession, that would declare themselves otherwise, if they thought they could do so without running any great or unequal Risks These Considerations shall always make me jealous of the Jacobite Party's getting any Opportunity to rebel, and this they have always thought they had, and always will think they have, when they fee the Nation destitute of Troops; for which Reason, I shall always be for keeping in the Illand, Island, in Time of War, as well as in Time of Peace, such An. 15, Geo. II. a Number of regular Troops as may be sufficient for awing 1742. them into Obedience.

But the Danger of an Infurrection at home, is far from being the only Danger we have to apprehend from not having in the Island a sufficient Number of Troops for our Defence. The Danger of an Invasion from abroad, with the Pretender at the Head of it, is equally to be apprehended; and the Nature of these two Dangers is such, that each contributes to the Increase of the other. We are now in actual War with Spain, and as we are vastly superior in Naval Force, even tho' she should be openly assisted by France, the can expect no Success: She must dread the Effects and the Event of that War, unless she can raise some domestick Combustion amongst us. Must we not then expect, is it not certain, that she will use every Art that can be thought of, for throwing 8 or 10,000 of her best Troops into this Island, with the Pretender and some of his Adherents at their Head? And is it not as certain, that upon their landing in any Part of the Island, they would be joined not only by all the Difaffected, but by all those of desperate Fortunes, who are always more ready to join in overturning, than in supporting an established Government; because, from their Success in the former, they must expect greater Encouragement than they can expect from their Succels in the latter. Spain, we know, has a sufficient Number of Troops to spare for this Purpose; and we know what a small Number of Ships would be fufficient for transporting 10,000 Foot and dismounted Dragoons from Spain to the Southern, or South-West Parts of this Island; for they would have no Occasion to transport Horse to a Country where Horses are fo plentiful, and which is fo much inclosed, that Horse can, in very few Places, come to a regular Engagement. Twenty or Thirty good Merchant Ships would be sufficient for such a Purpose; and these might be provided, the Troops embarked, and even landed here, before our Court could have any Intelligence of the Defign, which would have been the Case in the Year 1718, if their Fleet had not at that Time met with an accidental Storm and contrary Winds.

Our Navy, Sir, may be useful, it will always be sufficient, I hope, to desend us against a formidable Invasion, because we must have Intelligence of the Design, long before the necessary Preparations can be made for such an Invasion; and may, by a superior Squadron, lock the Enemy's Fleet up in their Port, before it can be ready to sail; but against a sudden Invasion with a small Force, such as I have mentioned, our Navy can never be a sufficient Security. For defending

An. 15. Geo. II. fending us against such an Invasion, we must always have a sufficient Number of Troops in the Island; and I must leave to Gentlemen to confider what a woeful and dangerous Condition we should be in, if 10,000 of the veteran Troops of Spain were landed in the Southern or Western Parts of this Island, and we had but 10 or 12,000 regular Troops in the whole Island: They might march to our Capital. drive the Royal Family, and all its Friends, from thence, and place the Pretender upon the Throne, before we could bring an equal Number of our regular Troops together to oppose them; and if they could do this, who can say, that our regular Army itself, or a great Part of it, would not declare in favour of the Invaders?

' The Danger of an Invation from Spain, is not therefore fuch a Bugbear, as some Gentlemen seem inclined to reprefent it; but upon fending our Troops to Flanders, Spain is not then the only Country from whence an Invation may be justly apprehended. The Defiga of our fending our Troops into Flanders is well known: It must be to circumscribe the Views of France, or directly to attack that Kingdom. Either of these will make France our Enemy, and will induce that Court to contrive, if possible, how to make an Invasion spon us. They are, 'tis true, at present at a great Expence: They have lost great Armies in Germany: They have still great Armies there; but they have likewife great Armies of regular Troops at Home, much more than would be fufficient for making an Invalion upon us, if we had but to or 12,000 regular Troops in the whole Island; and they now fee, that they will be in Danger of lofing all the Money they have spent, and all the Blood they have spilt, without being able to reap any Benefit to themselves; unless they can divert the Power of this Nation by raifing a Civil War amongst ourselves. Can we suppose, that in these Circumstances they will not attempt making an Invasion upon us, if by our own Misconduct we put it any Way in their Power ! By the Superiority of our naval Force, and by keeping a strong Squadron in the Channel, we may prevent their being able to make an Invalion upon us with any formidable Army; but confidering how many Ports they have within a few Hours fail of our Coast, how many Ships, Fishing Veffels, and Barks fit for transporting Soldiers in such a short Voyage, they have in every Port, and how well acquainted their Smugglers are with every Creek and Corner of our Shore, we must admit, that it would be very easy for them to embark and land 10 or 12,000 of their best Troops upon our Southern Coast, before we could any Way hear of their Defign, or fend any Squadron to disappoint them; and this. that we had no sufficient Number of regular Troops to march and attack theirs as soon as landed. I must therefore think, it would be the Height of Madness in us, to leave this Island destitute of a Number of Troops sufficient for desending us against an Invasion, that can be made suddenly and unawares: And as the Army we have now in this Island, together with the Troops to be brought from Ireland, is no more than sufficient for that Purpose, I cannot but approve of their being brought hither, and must therefore be for providing for their Subfishence.

Our Army, Sir, as it is at prefent modelled and commanded, is so far from being dangerous either to the Liberty or Property of the Subject, that I think it the furest Pledge we have for the quiet Enjoyment of both. I thought so under the late Administration: I shall think so under every Administration, unless I see an Attempt made to model it so, . as to make it fit for ferving the Ends of those that may aim at arbitrary Power. And as to the Millions we have raifed; or may be obliged to raise, I wonder to hear them complaintil of by Gentlemen, who, upon former Occasions, exclaimed so much against our Inactivity, and who have lately appeared to fanguine for supporting the Queen of Hungary. Surely, they do not think, that War is to be carried on without the Aid of Millions; or that our Soldiers and Seamen are to fight their Battles for them, without the usual Subfillence, I wish we could raise ten Times as many Millions as we do ? I am fure, I should think the whole well bestowed, if thereby we could procure a fafe and honourable Peace both for Europe and ourselves. We may, perhaps, Sir, for I have not made the Calculation, have at prefent above 60,000 Soldiers, if all the Regiments were compleat, befides for reign Troops in our Pay; but no Man can imagine we have as yet too many, for if the War continues, and becomes general, we must raise more, or, at least, we must take a much greater Number of foreign Troops into our Pay; and I never heard that an Army upon the Continent, or any Army but an Army kept up in this Island, in Time of Peace, and without the Confent of Parliament, was of dangerous Confequence to our Confliction; therefore I must think, that no Gentleman can, with Reason; find Fault with the Number of Troops we have now in our Pay, were that Number twice as great as it is at prefent.

Gentlemen still talk of Grievances, and of redressing Grievances at the fame Time we grant Supplies. They have harp'd fo much during this Session upon that String, that the Subject is in some Measure become ludicrous. Surely, if they Von. XIII.

An, 15, Geo. II, think any Thing a Grievance, they ought to put the Quellion fairly to the House, and have it voted to be so, before they talk of having it redress'd; especially, as they know, that there are many Gentlemen in this House who happen to differ from them in Opinion, with respect to every Grievance they have been pleased to give us the least Hint of; for some of those Things they have been pleased to mention as Grievances are, I believe, by a Majority of the House, thought to be National Benefits, and others are, by the same Majority, thought to have no prefent Existence. Therefore, till the Question is fairly stated, and the Opinion of the House taken upon it, which is the only Way I can think of for determining the Queltion, it is impossible to tell what is or is not a Grievance, or whether we have at all any Grievance to complain of. For my own Part, I do not think we have any Grievance but one to complain of, and that is, our having a Set of Gentlemen amongst us, who oppose every Meafure of Government, merely because they had no Share in advising it, nor are like to have any Share in carrying it into Execution. This, I shall grant, is a real Grievance. but this Grievance we have been always plagued with, and always, I fear, will, as long as we preferve our Liberties; therefore I shall never think of having it redressed: I shall only recommend it to all those who have now, or shall hereafter have, the Honour of being Members of this House, to confider feriously and impartially every Queilion that comes before them, and to give their Vote upon that Side which appears most suitable to the true Interest of their Country; for if this Advice be followed upon the prefent Occasion. I make no Doubt of having the Concurrence of a great Majority of this House, in agreeing with our Committee upon the Subject now under our Confideration.'

Mr Carew.

Mr Carew spoke next: of solicity had been been been about the

Whether I am ever missed, or whether I may be ever missed by an Affection of Popularity, I shall not pretend to determine; but I must acknowledge, and I glory in the Acknowledgment of it, that I do affect Popularity ; I do covet the Ellecm and good Opinion of my Countrymen: I shall always covet it: And Whatever Gentlemen may pretend, if they do not endeavour to be popular, it is not because they despise it, but because they find the Pursuit inconfishent with their Vanity, their Avarice, or some other more ridiculous Passion. I am sure, an Affectation to be a Courtier may, and does much oftner, mislead Men, than an Affectation to be popular; for when the People are fully inform'd informed, and have had Time to consider a Thing coolly Ap. 15. Geo. II. and feriously, we seldom find them judge amis; and the Reason is, because they have nothing in View but the publick Good, whereas a Court has feldom the publick Good in View fo much as some private Interest of its own. This Observation, which is founded in Reason, is confirmed by Experience; for through our whole History we shall find. that where the Court and People have happened to be of different Opinions, the People have almost always been in the right. I do not however fay, but the People may sometimes be in the wrong: When their Passions are inflamed, or when they have not a proper Information, they may judge amis; and when this is the Case, it is the Duty of every Man who differs from them, to endeavour to fet them right, and to maintain resolutely that Opinion which he thinks most reasonable; but upon such Occasions, a Man ought to examine and re examine his own Opinion, and to take great Care that he is not missed by some private Passion or View of his own.

"I wish every Gentleman in this House would follow this Method: If they did, we should have no Contest, Sir, about the Expediency of free and frequent Parliaments; nor about the Truth of several Facts which some Gentlemen now feem to doubt of, or positively to deny. We should all join in declaring Septennial Parliaments to be a Grievance; for except the second Parliament of King Charles II. or rather the first called by him, I do not know that ever any Parliament lasted so long as seven Years, till the Septennial Bill took Place; and fince that Time, I doubt if they have improved either in their Dignity or Use. We should all join in declaring it to be a Grievance, to have any Member of this House in Danger of losing the best Part of his Subsistence by voting according to his Conscience; and we should all join in having such a Suspicion of the late Conduct of our publick Affairs, as ought to be deemed a sufficient Ground for a ftrict Inquiry.

In all these Things the People without Doors almost universally concur; and if no Gentleman amongst us was missed by his Attachment to the Court, or to some private View or Passion of his own, I am persuaded we should here be pretty unanimous in the same Opinion. We should likewise, in this Cale, be unanimous, I believe, in our Opinion, that considering the great Number of Troops we have now on foot, we might safely spare to send 16.000 of them to Flanders, without calling over any Regiments from heland; for surely it will not be said, that those Regiments, while they termin here, can be of any Service to the Queen of H h 2

An. Ys. Geo. II, Hungary: On the contrary, they will do her a Prejudice. by confuming a Part of our publick Revenue which otherwife might be fent to her; and every one must grant, that ready Money is the Sort of Affiliance the flands most in: of history gains, bookers to one is present a sindy to only need of.

The Fear of an Invasion or an Insurrection in favour of the Pretender, is such a threadbare Argument, that I am furprised to hear it again seriously made use of in this House, What the Hon. Gentleman faid of the Redress of Grievances may much more justly be applied to the Fear of the Pretender; for this Argument is never made use of lately, but you may fee a general Smile spread itself over the whole Houfe. Nay, in the Countenance of every Gentleman who makes use of it, you may see such a Contrast as is generally observed in the Countenance of a young Widow upon the Loss of an old Husband. She affects a Sorrow, but in spight of all the can do, her inward Joy breaks forth in the Dispofition of some of her Features. I hope, all the Gentlemen of this House have a real Affection for our present Royal Family; but I wish, some of us would thew a little more Affection for the Liberties and Constitution of our Country for whoever betrays them to his fealoufy or Fear of the Pretender, does our prefent Royal Family more Harm by his lealoufy, than he can ever do it good by his Affection.

It would be easy, Sir, to show the Impossibility, or at least the Improbability of all the Infurrections and Invasions we have been terrified with in this Debate; but it is fo felfevident, and has been fo often and fo fully explained uponformer Occasions, that I do not think it worth my while to enlarge upon the Subject. Therefore, I shall only observe in general, that by some Gentlemens Way of arguing upon this Subject, they make a very bad Compliment to our prefent Royal Family, or to those who have an Affection for that Family; for by magnifying to fuch a Degree the Danger we should be in from an Insurrection or sudden Invasion in Favour of the Pretender, they must either suppose, that his Majetty has no affectionate Subjects except those who are inlifted in his Army, or they must suppose, that those who are well affected towards our present Royal Family, have so little Courage, that they will neither risk their Lives nor their Fortunes for that Family, upon which, they think, their Liberties, Properties and Religion depend. But however free those Gentlemen, out of the Abundance of their Affection, may make with their King or their Countrymes, I am far from having fuch an Opinion of either. I am perfunded, his Majelty has many loyal Subjects, besides those: of his Army, who would be ready to venture both their Lives

Lives and Fortunes in his Defence: I believe, there are very few An. 15. Geo. H. who would venture either for the Pretender; and therefore, if by a very extraordinary Concurrence of Events, 10 or 12,000 Foreigners were landed amongst us, with the Pretender at their Head, I am convinced, they would be joined by very few, but, on the contrary, would foon be overwhelmed by the Numbers of Men that would take Arms in Defence of their King, and the Liberties of their Country.

This I hope, Sir, is the Case at present: It will certainly be the Case, as long as the People think that the Prefervation of their Liberties depends upon the Preservation of our present happy Establishment; but should the Scene be changed, should the People find the Liberties of their Country oppressed by a numerous mercenary Army, and that Oppression enforced and made legal by a more mercenary Parliament, they would probably turn their Eyes to the Pretender for Relief; and then if he should land in any Part of the Island, with half the Number of foreign Troops, his Army would increase like a Snowball; a few Days March would make it too huge and mighty for our mercenary Army to oppose, and the more so, because a great many of the common Soldiers, and perhaps some of the Officers, would certainly defert, and join the invading Enemy. I must therefore think, that those Gentlemen who are for securing the People's Loyalty by a numerous mercenary Army, are exactly in the Case of a jealous Husband, who, to secure his Wife's Chafficy, locks her up: She will certainly, some Time or other, get an Opportunity, and the first she gets, she will certainly make the proper Use of, such an Use as fuch an Hulband deferves. Sir, the English Padlock is certainly the best: Clap the Padlock upon the Minds of the People: This can no way be done but by trufting to themfelves the Defence of their King and Country: Disband therefore your Army, or the greatest Part of that you have no Occation for abroad: Take all possible Methods to make your People accustom themselves to Arms and military Difcipline; and then you can be in no Danger from an Infurrection of a few difaffected Persons, nor from any Invasion that can be made upon you, as long as you have a superior Force at Sea.

For this Reason, Sir, I must be of Opinion, that the bringing these Regiments from Ireland and keeping them here, instead of preventing an Invasion, will probably enconrage our Enemies to make the Attempt; and instead of defeating it when made, they will more probably contribute towards rendering it successful. Gentlemen tell us, Sir. that our Army, modelled and commanded as it is at pre-SPECIAL PROPERTY. fent.

An, 15. Geo. II. fent, can never be dangerous to Liberty. For God's fake ! How would they have it modelled and commanded? Is it not modelled and commanded in the very same Manner those Armies were that have destroyed the Liberties of other. Countries? Is it not under the arbitrary Command of the Prime Minister.? Are not all the Officers Commissions at his arbitrary Disposal! Have not they been taught for twenty Years, that a blind Submission to his Orders, in civil as well as military Affairs, is the only Road to Preferment, the only Tenure by which they can expect to hold their Commissions? Is it possible to have an Army modelled and commanded in a Method more dangerous to Liberty? At the Revolution, I know, Sir, it was supposed, that no Army could be dangerous to Liberty, but an Army kept up within the Island, in Time of Peace, without the Consent of Parliament; but we have fince, by Experience, been taught otherwise: We now know, that the Officers of an Army, modelled as it is at present, may endanger publick Liberty by their own or their Friends Votes in this House and at Elections, more than they can do by their Swords in the Field; and in this Way, we know, that an Army of British Subjects, even when employed upon the Continent, or kept in any of our remote Dominions, may be of dangerous Consequence to the Liberties of their Country. My Hon. Friend was therefore in the right when he faid, that an Army of above 60,000 Men was inconsistent with the Constitution; for I shall always think so, as long as the Officers Commissions are all at the arbitrary Disposal of a Prime Minister.

> What our Ministers intend to do with the Troops now ordered for Flunders, or what Encouragement they may have for fending them thither, I do not know; but if they have good Reason to expect that our Troops will be joined by the Troops of some neighbouring States, I hope, these Regiments that are to be brought from Ireland, and as many more as we can possibly spare, will be sent after the rest. I shall not as yet pretend to find Fault with this Measure of fending our Troops abroad; but if it should afterwards apnear, that we had no good Reason to hope for being joined by any other Troops, besides those of the Queen of Hungary, nor any Reason to expect being able to form a Confederacy in favour of that Princess, I shall then certainly condemn the Measure; for surely we are not so mad as to imagine, that we are able to support the Pragmatick Sanction. against all the powerful Princes of the Empire, united with France and Spain against it; and if we should be obliged. to bring our Troops back without attempting any Thing.

we shall make a very poor Figure in the Eyes of all Europe, An. 15, Geo. 15. which, I am fure, will no Way contribute to reflore our Character, but on the contrary, will fink it still lower, if possible, than our late Pulillanimity and perplexed Negotrations have done. If we are still to do nothing but negotiate, we might have faved ourfelves the Expence of keeping in Pay such a numerous Army; or, at least, we might have kept our Money amongst ourselves, by keeping our Army at home. All the Powers of Europe know, that, as we are Masters of the Sea, and have always abundance of Transports ready at a Call, we can find an Army to the Continent whenever we pleafe; and therefore, if none of them be now inclined to join us, I am fure, our putting ourfelves to the Expence of lending a large Body of Troops thither, without some previous the secret Assurances, will not alter their Inclinations, because it will give them a very bad Opinion of our Conduct.

Ministers had good Assurances from these that ought to give them: In that Case, I hope, the Regiments proposed to be brought from Deland will be fent after the rest; but till they are sent, or just ready to be sent, I think we have no Occasion to transfer them from the Irish to the British Establishment; for which Reason I must be against approving pointed accordingly.

The next Day the Lord Hillsborough having made a Report from the faid Committee, a Motion was made by Lord Strange , seconded by Lord Quarendon +, That the Lords refuling to concur with the Commons of Great Britain, in folve, That the an Indemnification necessary to the effectual carrying on the Inquiry now depending in Parliament, is an Obltruction Bill is an Ob-Aruction to pub- to Justice, and may prove fatal to the Liberties of this Nation': This occasion'd a warm Debate, in which Lord Hillfborough spoke as follows:

Debate thereon.

Ld Hillsborough.

When the Nation has been oppressed and plundered by a wicked Minister, or when there is a general Suspicion among the People that it has been so, publick Justice requires, that the Conduct of fuch a Minister should be fully and strictly inquired into, that he may be condignly punished if guilty, or his Character cleared from Suspicion if innocent: And when in the Course of that Inquiry it appears, that he has been fo cunning as to prevent its being possible to carry it on with Effect by the Laws in being, such new Laws ought to be made as may appear necessary for attaining that End. That there is a general Suspicion against our late Minister, I believe, no Man can be ignorant who has ever been in any Coffee-House, or other Place of publick Refort, frequented by those who dare avow the Sentiments of their Heart; and from the Fate of the Bill which, we now find, has been rejected by the other House, I am convinc'd, that those Suspicions are well grounded; for it is impossible to suppose, that such a Bill would have met with fuch an Opposition in this House, or such a Fate in the other, if the Conduct of our late Minister had been blameleis.

As the Nature and the Necessity of that Bill were fully explained, and made evident to a Majority of this House in the Debates that happened upon it here, I have no Occasion to repeat what was faid upon either. The Bill was flewn to be of fuch a Nature as could do no Prejudice to any innocent Man; and it was demonstrated, to a Majority at least of this House, that without such a Bill's being passed into a Law, it would be impossible for our Secret Committee to make any Discovery, even of those Crimes, which from the Oblinacy of some of the Persons examined by them, An. 15. Geo. II there is too good a Ground for supposing to have been committed. It is therefore evident, that by this Bill's being rejected by the other House, the Course of our Inquiry is obstructed, and the People for this Session at least disappointed of that Justice they had a Right to expect from Parliament. But this is not all: The rejecting of this Bill will be attended with Consequences, which in a twofold Respect must be dangerous to our Conflitution. It will make the People begin to despise Parliaments, and despair of ever meeting with any Relief from them; and it will make all future Ministers more during in their Attempts to overturn the Freedom and Independency of Parliament. If any Minister should ever succeed in such an Attempt, the People would certainly, in a very short Time, have Reason to hate Parliaments: Nay, they would probably join with the Prince in laying them intirely aside; for an absolute Government. without any Form of Liberty, is certainly better and more tolerable than a Government supported by an Assembly of Men, who, under Pretence of being the Guardians of publick Liberty, take every Opportunity to betray it, and ferve for nothing but that of making the Government more expensive, and the Prince more arbitrary.

We have, 'tis true, in this Session made some Steps towards preventing this fatal Consequence: Our having established a Secret Committee; our having named of that Committee a Set of Gentlemen, most of whom were generally approved of by the People; and our having passed the Indemnifying Bill for rendering their Inquiry effectual, are Proofs that we were in Earnell: But I wish our Endeavours had been more vigorous and speedy; for considering that we might have eafily foreseen and prevented what has now come to pass, I am afraid, lest the People should suspect the Integrity of our Intentions. They may perhaps imagine, that we knew our Inquiry would be ineffectual, without an Indemnifying Bill for encouraging Accomplices to become Informers; and that we delayed the bringing in and passing that Bill, till after we had passed the Mutiny Bill, and granted all the Supplies, that it might be safely rejected by the other House. Such a Supposition may at this Time be the more probably made, because it is well known, that some Bills have been lately passed in this House without Opposition, and, perhaps, with the Concurrence of some who were, in their Hearts, against the Bill, for no other Reason, but because they were sure of the Bill's being rejected by the other House.

An. 15. Geo. II.

' I am far from faying, Sir, that there is any real Ground for such Suspicions; but they are such as may be entertained, and they are such as we ought in Duty to ourselves, and for the Sake of the Character of this House, to endeavour to prevent. In this Session we cannot, I think, take any other Method for preventing it, than by declaring openly our Sentiments of the Bill's being rejected by the other House; and therefore I have prepared a Motion, in which I cannot doubt of having the Concurrence of the House. I know I am not to expect the Concurrence of those who declared against the Bill, even when it was passing thro' this House; but as it was in every Step carried by a Majority, and as every Gentleman, who was a real and fincere Friend to the Bill must be of Opinion, that the rejecting of it is an Obstruction to Justice, and of the most dangerous Consequence to our Liberties, I shall, and I think I may with Hopes of Success, move you to resolve, That the Lords refusing to concur with the Commons of Great Britain, in an Indemnification necessary to the effectual carrying on the Inquiry now depending in Parliament, is an Obstruction to Justice, and may prove fatal to the Liberties of this Nation.'

Mr Sandys.

Mr Sandys spoke to the following Effect:

I hope no Man doubts of my Inclination, or my Since. rity, in carrying on the Inquiry that has been fet on Foot, or in being a Friend to any Thing that has been proposed for rendering it effectual; and yet I cannot agree with the Noble Lord in the Motion he has been pleased to make to you, because I think it has a very different Tendency: In my Opinion, it would bring on an immediate Dissolution of our present Form of Government; for after our agreeing to fuch a Motion, I should expect, that the next Motion would be, to vote the other House useless, and that it ought therefore to be laid aside. I disapprove, as much as any Man can do of the Conduct of the other House, in rejecting the Indemnifying Bill we fent up to them, because I thought such a Bill necessary for obtaining Justice to a Nation that has, in my Opinion, been greatly injured; but the I disapprove of the Conduct of the other House in this Particular, I do not for that Reason think it ought to be laid aside, or that we have any Right to pass a Censure upon it. The Lords are generally called the Upper House of Parliament, and tho' it is not from thence to be inferred, that they are fuperior to us, yet it must be allowed, that they are quite independent, dependent, and have as good a Right to refuse any Bill we An. 15. Geo. II. fend to them, as we have to refuse any Bill they send to us; and we cannot furely pretend to cenfure them for making use of a Right which we acknowledge to be inherent in them.

But suppose, Sir, we should agree to censure the other House for what they have done, without pushing our Refentment farther, our Censure would do more Harm to ourfelves than it could do to them, because it would bring us into Contempt. Those who have no Power to punish, should always abitain from censuring, because it makes their Want of Power be taken Notice of; and as foon as their Want of Power comes to be generally known, their Censures will become ridiculous. We ought not therefore to agree to this Motion, without first resolving to push our Resentment sarther; and I do not see how we can do so. We succeeded once, 'tis true, in voting the other House useless, and confequently laying them entirely aside, but we then had the Army at our Command, which we cannot now pretend to: and if we had, the Consequence of that Proceeding can be no great Encouragement for practifing it a second Time; for that very Army which enabled the Commons to turn the Lords out of Doors, afterwards affilled their General in turning the Commons out of Doors, and supported him in the Exercise of a most arbitrary and tyrannical Power over these three Kingdoms during all the Days of his Life.

'The Fate of these Kingdoms at that Time, Sir, should be a Warning to latest Posterity, to beware of attempting any Thing that may tend to introduce Confusion, by overturning a regular and well established Government, which, in all Appearance, would be the Consequence of this Motion's being agreed to, even suppose we should proceed no farther; for after our having passed such a severe Censure upon the other House, it would be inconfishent with their Honour to have any Correspondence with us, or to receive any Message, or any Bill from this House of Commons. This would lay his Majesty under a Necessity of dissolving the present Parliament; and if a new House of Commons should be chosen of the same Complexion, they would probably revive the Cenfure of their Predecessors, which would bring his Majesty under the Necessity of governing without a Parliament: A Necessity which would, I am fure, be most disagreeable to him, and a Necessity which might he of fatal Confequence to the Nation, because it would probably be attended with a Civil War.

These Consequences, I think, Sir, are most justly to be apprehended from our agreeing to this Motion; and if 1742

n. 15. Geo. II, any fuch Confequence should enfue, would it not put an Hud to all Parliamentary Inquiries, either in this or any future Seffion of Parliament? Our Committee may not, perhaps, he able to make fuch ample Discoveries as they might have made, had this Bill been passed into a Law; but none of them have as yet faid, they can make no Difcovery. The contrary might, perhaps, be made appear; and they may in this Seffion make fuch farther Discoveries as may induce the other House to agree to a new Bill, of much the same Purport with that they have now rejected. But suppose this should not be the Case: Suppose no material or full Discovery should be made during this Session: The Inquiry may be revived, and a new Secret Committee appointed, as foon as we meet in the next Session: The same Bill may then be revived, and fent up to the other House at a Time when it would be dangerous for them to difagree to it; or a new Bill may be contrived, which, in my Opinion, would be the best Method; and as we now know the Objections they made to our former, we may form our new Bill in fuch a Manner as to obviate all those Objections. Many well then but "

For these Reasons, Sir, I cannot join in afferting expressly, that our late Bill's being rejected is an Obstruction to Juflice; because I am not fure of our being quite unable to come at Justice without that Bill, and because if we do not come at it in this Seffion, we may in the next; but should this Motion be agreed to, I am fure, we can never come at Justice in a Parliamentary Method, either in this Session or the next, nor, perhaps, in any future. It would, in my Opinion, unavoidably produce a Civil War; and this furely is an Event which ought at all Times to be most cautiously guarded against, but especially in the present Conjuncture, when the Trade and Navigation of this Island is in Danger of being dettroyed by one Power, and the Liberties of Europe by another; and these by their Situation, Genius, and Interest, the two most constant and dangerous Enemies this Nation has in

I am therefore convinced, that if the two noble Lords who made and seconded this Motion, had read and been well acquainted with the Hillory and Conflitution of their Country, they would not have offered such a Motion to your Confideration. Can they fay, they have studied our Journals with that Attention which is necessary for forming a compleat Idea of all the Consequences that may ensue from fuch a Motion? From their Youth it is hardly possible to suppose they have; and from their known Attachment to the Liberties and Constitution of their Country it is evident they have not; for no one that knows them can suspect them of any evil Intention. I therefore hope, An. 15. Geo. II. when they have confidered what I have faid, and what may be faid by other Gentlemen in the Debate, that they will drop their Motion; for tho' I am convinced, it can meet with no Success, yet the very Appearance of it upon our Journals may produce some of the bad Effects I have mentioned; and these, I hope, when they are apprised of them, they will be ready and willing to prevent.'

Sir John Hind Cotton.

' I would not have my old Friend, now over against me, tho' formerly he used to be of the same Side with me, I say I would not have him, nor some other Gentlemen in the House, imagine, that no Man doubts of their Sincerity in the effectual Profecution of the Inquiry we have let on foot; for I can affure them, there are many without Doors who now begin to doubt of it; but if a Negative should be put upon this Motion, those Doubts will be at an End: Most Men will then be convinced, not of their Sincerity, but of their Want of it; and therefore, if those Gentlemen have any Regard for what is faid or thought of them, they will not allow themseves to be frighted by chimerical Dangers, from vindicating their own Characters, as well as the Character of this House, from those Aspersions that will certainly fpring up from the bad Success of our Inquiry occasioned by the rejecting of our Bill.

It is well known, Sir, without Doors as well as within, that a new Minister generally endeavours to cast a Slur upon the Administration of an old one, in order to add a Lustre to his own, and to gain a little Applause at the Beginning of his Reign; but he always takes Care to prevent the former's meeting with condign Punishment, lest he should thereby prepare a Rod for his own Back; for it is ten to one but in few Years he may deserve Punishment as much as his Predecessor. It is likewise well known without Doors as well as within, by whose Eloquence and Advice our Bill was rejected in the other House; and considering their Intimacy and Connection with some Gentlemen in this, who appeared to be firendous Advocates for the Bill, People already begin to suspect that the latter had some Sort of Foreknowledge of the Fate of the Bill, which gave them an Opportunity of gaining a little Popularity by declaring for a Bill which they were in their Hearts against; because if it had been passed into a Law, they were afraid, it would have brought to Light such a Scene of Iniquity, as would have put it out of their Power to prevent the Criminal's meeting with condign Punishment. Such An. 15. Seo. II. a Suspicion, I say, has already arisen, and if by Means of those Gentlemen this Motion should meet with the same Fate in this House, as our Bill met with in the other, that Suspicion will be confirmed.

'I am surprised, Sir, to hear Gentlemen say, that if this Motion should be agreed to, they should expect its being followed by another Motion for voting the House of Lords useless. Surely, I may tell a Man he has done wrong, without any Design or Desire to murder him. On the contrary, if I am really his Friend, I ought to tell him my Opinion, in order to prevent his doing the like for the future, especially if his Safety as well as his Character should depend upon his doing so no more. This, Sir, is really the Case at present betwixt us and the House of Lords. That House has done wrong: The Hon. Gentleman himself says he thinks they have done wrong: I think so as well as he: He is for fmothering his Opinion, and thereby facrificing his Friendship to his Complaisance: I am for telling them bluntly what I think: Pray, which of us is the truest Friend to that House?

' Sir, in all Cases that will admit of it, I shall be for treating my Friend with Complaifance; but in a Cafe where his Safety or Character is concerned, Complaisance is Treachery: I abominate it: I despise the Man who, upon such an Occasion, would make use of it. This, Sir, is the Light in which the present Question appears to me. The very Being, as well as the Character, of the other House depends upon their rejecting no more such Bills as that we lately sent up to them. It was not the Army: It was not the Commons, that put an End to the Existence of that House in King Charles the First's Time: It was their own Conduct. By refusing their Consent to popular and necessary Laws, by endeavouring to screen guilty Ministers, they render'd their House hateful to the People. This enabled the Commons and the Army to turn them out of Doors; and the General's being in a Condition afterwards to turn the Commons out of Doors flowed from the same Cause. If ever the like Case should again happen, the same Cause may very probably produce the same Effect; and therefore what happened at that Time should be a Warning to the other House, as well as this, to endeavour at all Times to preferve a good Character among the People.

" I shall readily grant, Sir, that at that Time there was fuch a Spirit of Republicanism and Enthusiasm prevailed among the People, that it was difficult for the other House to preferve a popular Edeem, without facrificing our Conilitution both in Church and State; but this Spirit had been raised and propagated by the Conduct of those who were at An. 15. Geo. 11.

that Time our Ministers; and in all such Cases common Prudence makes it necessary to yield a little to the Impetuofity of the Times. This should make all Ministers cautious of raising too violent a Spirit among the People against them; for when they do, it will always be necessary for the Parliament to proceed against them with more Severity than they may perhaps deserve; and those of either House, who have a true Regard for their Sovereign, and for the Constitution of their Country, will take Care to remove and punish a Minister before he has, by his Conduct, converted the Discontents of the People into a Spirit of Disassection; for when this happens, the Example of King Charles the First's Reign is a Proof of its being almost impossible to consince it within any moderate Bounds.

This, Sir, I think, we are in some Danger of at prefent, especially if it should begin to be generally thought without Doors, that both Houses of Parliament have joined in Skreening a guilty Minister, and in amusing the Publick with a sham Inquiry into his Conduct. The present Motion therefore, if complied with, may answer, and is, I believe, defigned for answering two most falutary Purposes; that of letting our Friends, the Lords, (I hope I may yet call them fo) know their Danger; and that of rescuing this House from the Danger of becoming despicable in the Eyes of the People. This Motion is fo far from being defign'd as a Censure upon the Conduct of the other House, that it is defigned as an Act of Friendship. We certainly know the Sentiments of the People better than they can be supposed to do; therefore we are, and, I think, we ought to tell them what we, and, I believe, the far greatest Part of the Nation, think of their having rejected that Bill we fo lately fent up to them. This may prevent their bringing them-Selves into that Contempt, which a few more such Steps as this will certainly bring them into. Therefore as Friends to them, as Friends to our Constitution, and as faithful Subjects to our Sovereign, we ought to agree to this Motion.

But suppose, Sir, it were to be look'd on as a Censure. Is not Censure itself sometimes the Duty of a Friend? Does not the Church censure or admonish before she excommunicates? We are not by this Motion to excommunicate the other House; and, I hope, they will not excommunicate this, even tho' we should agree to this Motion. If they should, as we have the Purse in our Power, they would find themselves no great Gainers by the Bargain. They are sufficiently sensible of this, and therefore we have no Occasion to sear their resolving to receive no more Mcsages of

Bills

An. 15. Geo. II. Bills from this House. Their Honour could not be any Way. concerned in the Question; because if they took it right, they would take it as a friendly Admonition; and tho' they cannot recal what is paffed, I hope, they would for their own Sakes take care to give us no more Room for fuch a Cenfure.

> 'That they have a Right to refuse any Bill we send up to them must be acknowledged; but that we have no Right to find Fault with the Use they make of that Right, no Man furely can with any Reason pretend. May not a Man make a bad as well as a good Use of any Right he enjoys? And if he makes a bad Use of it, has not every other Man a Right to fay he does, and to censure him for so doing? Centure, Sir, when it is just, tho' it proceeds from no legal Authority, nor from any superior Jurisdiction, will always carry Punishment along with it. It affects the Character of the Person consured, and will affect it more or less, according to the Justice and Weight of the Censure. Therefore a Man who has no Power to inflict any legal Punishment may cenfure, without running any Rifk of incurring Contempt. Nay, a Man may often for his own Sake be obliged to cenfure the Conduct of his Friend, in order to shew, that he had no Share in advising, nor had approved of that Con-1 duct, which leads me to the other Purpose this Motion is defigned for.

> * To vindicate the Character of this House from any Reproach will always, I hope, be confidered as a Concern worthy of our Attention; and confidering the general Reproach that will certainly be thrown upon the rejecting of this Bill, I think it concerns us highly to convince the World, that we were no Way privy or confenting to its being rejected. The two Houses of Parliament generally are look'd upon, I hope, there will always be Reason to look upon them, as Friends; and therefore, if one does a wrong Thing, and the other does not openly disclaim it, an Imputation will fall upon both. This is the Case in private Life, and this will always be the Case with two publick Assemblies that have such a Connection together as our two Houses of Parliament have, especially when it is known, that there is a close Intimacy and Friendship between the Members of the one and the Members of the other. As to my own private Concern, if I had no Regard for the Character of this Assembly, I might be perfectly easy; for most of the Lords of my Acquaintance have, in the most folemn Manner, declared their Diffent to the rejecting of this Bill. But I have a Concern for the Character of this House: As a Friend to the Constitution, as a dutiful Subject to his Majesty, I think III myfelf myfelf obliged to have a Concern for it; and thank God Am sc. Gpo. IL. no one, either of our new or old Ministers, has fach an Influence over me, as to prevent my expressing that Concern. and acting accordingly. I therefore think, it is abfolutely. necessary for us, upon this Occasion, to take some Method for convincing the World, that we had no Foreknowledge. nor fo much as a previous Suspicion, that a Bill so necessary for discovering the Conspiracy, that has for several Years been carrying on against the Liberties of this Nation, by a Minister and his Creatures, was to be rejected by the other House; and as I can suggest no better Method than what the noble Lord has been pleased to propose, I shall be for agreeing to it.

The other Honse, Sir, neither ought, nor will, nor can refent it. It is a Liberty we have often taken, and do usually take at Conferences, to declare very freely our Opinion of their Proceedings. There is therefore no Danger of a Breach between the two Houses, and much less of a Civil War, from our agreeing to this Motion; but if a Negative should be put upon it, and an Encouragement thereby given to profecute those Screening Measures which seem to be already concerted, I may prophefy, that a Civil War will certainly at last he the Consequence; for, I hope, the People of England are not so senseless, or so cowardly, as to allow Slavery to be fixed upon them, under the Form of a free Government; which will be the Consequence, if the Corsuption practifed by Ministers is never to be detected, nor punished.

Vol. XIII.

The Hon. Gentleman talks of what our Committee have done, or may do, and of the other House being induced to page forme fuch Bill as that they have rejected. Sir, it is impossible from the very Nature of the Thing: The Hon. Gentleman himself shewed, in our Debates upon that Bill, that it would be impossible for them to make any great Difcoveries, unless the Accomplices were, at least, enabled to come in and inform. Let our Minister have been never fo criminal, we cannot suppose him so weak as to have left any written Vouchers of his Villainy behind him; especially confidering the long Indulgence he had, after he knew he was to be dismissed, to ransack all the Offices, and destroy every Paper that might rife up in Judgment against him. We must therefore suppose, that the rejecting of our Bill has put it out of the Power of our Committee to make any material Discovery, especially such a full Discovery as will be necessary for convincing those that have no Mind to be convinced: This, I sen almost fure, it the Case of a Majority in the other House, and, I am afraid of some in this, who are not

An. 14. Geo. II. as yet suspected of being in such a Case: And from the Principle upon which our Bill was rejected in the other House. we must suppose, that while they adhere to that Principle, no Discovery can induce them to pass such a Bill. To encourage Informers, by granting them a Pardon as to themfelves, was faid to be unjust and dangerous to Innocence. Petty Thieves may, it feems, be encouraged by a Reward as well as a Pardon, to inform against one another; but great and publick Plunderers are to remain intrenched in their mutual Danger, from which no one is to be allowed to escape, lest he should betray the secret Avenue by which alone his Confederates may be come at.

'This, Sir, was the Principle, ridiculous as it is, upon which our Bill was rejected in the other House; and while they adhere to this Principle, can we expect they will agree. either in this Session or the next, to any Sort of Indemnifying Bill? To pretend to argue Men out of a first Principle, let it be never so absurd, is ridiculous, because it is impossible: If they be obstinate they must be beat out of it: If they be mad they must be physick'd out of it. A strong Purgation. I mean as to Salaries and Pensions, would, I believe, be the best Method the Nation could take for obtaining Justice from Parliament, both in this Cafe and every like Cafe that may happen hereafter. We cannot therefore expect Success for any fuch Bill, either in this Session or the next; unless by agreeing to this Question we shew that we are resolved to administer such a Remedy, if this Principle be not given up by those who are its present Supporters.

' How the Hon. Gentleman comes to talk of what may be done in the next Session, I do not know; for, I hope, none of those, who have the Honour of being his Majesty's Counfellors, will advise him to put an End to this Session by a Prorogation, till the Nation has obtained Satisfaction. A short Receis would, I know, be agreeable to most Gentlemen, but this we may be indulged in by an Adjournment as well as a Prorogation. Our Committee might then fit in the mean Time, in order to carry on their Inquiries; and when we affembled again, we might proceed from where we left off at our last Meeting; but a Prorogation will put an End to our Committee, and oblige us to begin every Thing afresh. Therefore, if this Question should be rejected, and an End put to this Session by a Prorogation, before the Nation has obtained any Satisfaction, I am fure, I shall expect no Justice nor Satisfaction; no, nor the least Step towards it, from the next Session of Parliament, nor from any Session of this Parliament, unless the People should be so wife, as to make this House change its Complexion, by the new Members they fend up to us, instead of those whose Seats may An. 15. Geo. II. happen to become vacated.' AND REPORT OF THE PARTY AND PARTY AND PARTY.

Lord Cornbury Spoke next. Lord Cornbury. Sir.

I was very much furprised when I first heard this Motion made to you, and consequently was extremely curious to hear what could be faid in favour of fach an extraordinary and unprecedented Motion. As foon as I heard it, I thought it unconstitutional, dangerous and useless; and as I have a great Regard for the young Nobleman that mov'd it, as well as for those Gentlemen that have spoke in its Favour, I have attended to the Debate with a Sort of Prejudice; waiting, and even wishing, to hear something said that might alter the first Impression it made upon me; but I have been very much disappointed, for those Impressions have been made deeper and stronger, even by what I have heard in its favour. As our Conttitution confifts of three separate Branches, each of which, while they are distinct and independent, will always be a Check for preventing any Opprethon's being exercis'd, or Injustice done, by either of the other two, the very Being of our Conslitution depends upon preserving a Distinctness and Independency, and at the same Time a good Correspondence between the three Branches of our Legislature; and consequently our Constitution would be destroyed, if this mutual good Correspondence should be interrupted, or if any one of them should gain an Influence, and much more, a Power or Jurisdiction, over either of the other two.

If we defign, Sir, that this Censure should be taken Notice of by the other House, so as to direct or overawe their Proceedings upon any future Occasion, the very Design is inconfistent with our Constitution; because it is a Design to gain such an Influence over them, as will destroy their Independency, upon which our Constitution sublists. Therefore, if this Censure should be taken Notice of in the Manner we defign it should, it is unconstitutional; and if it is to be taken no Notice of, it is useless; but as it is, in my Opinion, very far from being decent, I believe it will be taken Notice of by the other House, not in the Manner we design, but in fuch a Manner as will destroy that good Correspondence which now subsists between the two Houses, and upon which the Preservation of our Constitution depends; therefore I must think it extremely dangerous, and as I think it will be of no Use to us, I cannot for this Reason agree to it.'

An. 15. Geo. II.

Mr.Cornewall.

Mr Cornewall spoke to the following Effect:

As I very seldom speak so late at Night, I flatter myfelf, that the House will excuse me for now doing it, especially as I shall chiefly endeavour to answer the noble Lord who spoke last, and the learned Gentleman behind me; tho, I think, as that Gentleman was an Enemy to every Clause in the Bill, now thrown out by the other House, which was to indemnify those who were to give Evidence to the Secret Committee against the Earl of Oxford, I should murder our Time, were I to spend it in obviating any Objections made by him, or any of his Friends, who have been so uniform and consistent with themselves, in the violent Opposition they have made to every Thing that rended in the teast towards promoting the Inquiry.

But as to that Part of his Speech, wherein he thinks it pretty odd, that this House should have a Power to inspect the Journals of the other House, and asks, what Right we have to censure another superior House of Parliament? I have, Sir, no less Authority than your own to say, that both Houses of Parliament are equal; and that we only exercise a Power our Ancestors have used before. As the learned Gentleman has now, and on other Occasions, taken a Kind of Pleasure in paring down the Powers of this House, I hope, he will soon, for his long and implicit Services to his Majesty, be sent hence to preside in Westminster Hall, and take this trite Piece of Advice thither along with him; that it is the Part of a good Judge, not to curtail but amplify his own Jurisdiction.

'Unless we now exercise this Right, and lay the blame at the right Door, our Constituents won't think we have done our utmost, and been in earnest, in putting a great State Criminal fairly on his Trial; and nobody who reads that inimitable Protest, signed by above thirty of their Lordships, can doubt but that some invisible Influence must have operated on two Thirds of the House when they threw out our just and reasonable Bill; which puts me in mind of an Account there is, I think, in Father Paul, or some other Writer on the Council of Trent: He says, that the Powers concerned pitched on Trent as a neutral Place, for all the Legates to meet at, and where no Prince could himself claim any Right to come; but, fays the Writer, (who, I think, feems to be rather a good Catholick than a strong Papist) all the Decrees of this Assembly ran so much in Favour of the Pope, that altho' he could not come there himself, his Holiness sent the Holy Ghost thither from Rome every Day in a Cloak-Bag. I leave it to every Gentleman to make his own Application to receive more favourably than it deferves.

Even my Friend near me smiles, who, had he not now been in a very high Station in the Exchequer, would not have expossually been in a very high Station in the Exchequer, would not have expossually been and seconded this Question, who, he says, cannot yet have read the History of their own Country. What they said, Sir, plainly evinced the contrary; but the Gentleman was so much alarmed at the Motion itself, that he could not attend to what was said in Support of it; but he goes on and says, the other House won't bear it. As to that, Sir, give me Leave to ask him, How they'll help themselves? But, says he, what is there that the Lords won't do or say, when such Aspersions are cast upon them? I humbly submit it, Sir, that what is true can't be called an Aspersion: We do it for our own Justification; and pray, let them take it for their Pains.

And then, Sir, as to the Gentleman's Prophecy, that his Majesty, if the two Houses differ, may dissolve the Parliament: The King, Sir, will think twice, before he once dissolves a good Money-giving Parliament; for if the prefent should not please him, I'll venture to prophely, that the new one will be far from mending the Matter. If such Advice, or such unpopular Measures should ensue, I flatter myself that instead of one, I should be chosen for three or four Places, which would happen to many Gentlemen of fuperior Merit in the same Way of thinking; and many other Country Gentlemen without Doors, would fill the Places of fome who hear me, that might then be thought too courtly in their present Behaviour. I have my Reasons too for thinking, that the Hon. Gentleman's Interest with the Crown is not very great: I am forry for it; because if it was, I hope and believe, that more popular Measures would be pursued ..

But, Sir, since we have lost our Bill, I'll be bold to say, that unless we put some Stigma upon that Proceeding, our Committee of Secrecy will be a Committee of Redicule; and the noble Lord who so very worthily and indefatigably presides in it, must put one in mind of the mad Frenchman in Mr Locke, who sancying himself a King, cries out, Ou fost mes Gens d'Armes? The noble Lord is my old friend and Acquaintance, and will sorgive me, I'am sure, for blurting out so odd a Parallel; but I am really driven to say any Thing, and to think that, if this Question has a Negative put upon it, he will, notwithslanding his great Abilities, be little more than a Chairman of Straw; and that he'll sit in great State, subject only to this single Inconvenience,

An. 15. Geo. 11. that no Soul alive will answer one single Question he asks

But I ask the noble Lord's Pardon, who so worthily represents the most learned Body in the World, that I've been so long without endeavouring to invalidate the Force of some of his Arguments; and, indeed, his Lordship's Manner of saying every Thing is such, that he may say any Thing.

· He, Sir, is pleased to say, that there is an End of the Constitution, if any one Branch of the Legislature is influenced by the other; and it is much stronger in the Case of

'If the Influence were indirect or improper, or if the Censure were untrue or unconstitutional, I should agree with his Lordship; but in this Case I may more reasonably suppose, that the other House has been under some extraordinary Influence; and pray, Sir, have we not a Right at any Time to expostulate, or demand a free Conserence with their Lordships? Ought they not even to lie under the Censure of the Commons, for rejecting this our most necessary favourite Bill, when the Committee declares, that they can't proceed without it.

As to his Argument, that it is not decent to fay this to the Lords, and asking what good it will do us? I insist, Sir, that Truth is to be said at all Times, in all Places, and to all Persons; and as to the Good, it will vindicate the Honour of the Members to their Constituents: It will place the national Odium where it ought to lie; and not only make their Lordships cautious in screening State Criminals, but make them shew a Readiness perhaps to redress Grievances, and afraid for the suture of giving the like Treatment to any publick national Bill carried thither by this House; and,

Sir, * * * * * - Desunt multa.

As to his Lordship's saying, that a Protest is an Act of the Minority, I submit it, Sir, as the Act of Thirty two Noblemen of the greatest Quality, Figure, and Fortune in this Country; and as that House has exercised that Power for many Centuries, without even assigning Reasons to their Protestations, so now they have for near a Century, subjoined one or more Reasons, out of which Articles of Impeachment have been often framed, which I hope will be the Case at present, there having never been, in my poor Opinion, a fitter Time for it; nor a Protest, for the Printing of which, as I am warranted by Precedents, I shall presently move, that deserved more gloriously to be printed in Letters of Gold.

' Upon the whole, Sir, I am for every Tittle of the Motion, from the Bottom of my Soul.'

As it is now very late, and the House, I see a little impatient, I shall only ask a noble Lord who spoke lately, how, Lord Strange. he thinks we are to prevent the other House from doing Injustice, if we are never even so much as to censure any of their Proceedings? If they in any Case do a manifest Piece of Injustice, are we to take no Notice of it? If we do take Notice of it, can we do so without condemning it? This is now the Case. They have done Injustice to the Nation: They have refused to the whole People of Great-Britain what is never denied to the meanest Subject whohas been greatly injured by Persons unknown, or against whom he has not a sufficient Proof. A Pardon to any Accomplice who shall discover, or come in and give Evidence against the principal Offender, is never refused to any injured Person: This the Lords have denied to the Nation, 'tho it has been greatly injured, as is apparent from its present Distress. Shall we take no Notice of this Piece of Injustice? Ought we not, for the lake of the People whom we in this House represent, to pass such a Censure upon it as it deserves? Ought wenot to censure it for our own sakes, in order to shew, that we have been neither privy nor confenting to such a manifest Piece of Injuttice ? ****

Several other Members, who had voted for the Inquiry, Ld Strange's Mo-declaring, that the for the Satisfaction of the Nation they the Lords Prowish'd the Bill had pass'd into a Law, yet they could not ceedings on the agree to this Resolution, lest it should create a Breach be. The first Resolution of the said Committee being read a Resolution of the fecond Time, Mr Philips flood up and spoke to the follow- Committee of Supply for great-

Sir,

The Gentlemen on the other Side of the House cry out, Annuities at 1 Agree, agree; but as I do not find them fo very ready to per Cent. agree to any Proposal that comes from this Side of the House, to redress Grievances, or to promote Inquiries, and to render them effectual, I hope, they'll excuse me, if I do not immediately agree to this Proposition. Sir, when this Resolution was proposed and agreed to in the Committee. I was at fo great a Distance from the Chair, that I could not distinctly hear it; therefore, I hope, I may be allowed to say a Word or two to it now, not that I have the least Expectation, that any Thing I can say will have such an Effect on the House, as to cause any Alteration in this Resolution; but I cannot let it pals without some Remarks.

According to the Computation that I have made, the Supplies voted this Session amount to about 5,723,000 /. to which must be added the Deficiency of last Year's Malt and Land Tax, which comes to about 373,000 l. fo that the whole Sum to be raifed is about 6,097,000 l. The Ways and Means already voted amount to about 5,350.000 l. which being deducted from the 6,097,000 I. there will remain to be railed about 747,000 l. If I do not mistake, the Resolution of the Committee is to raise 800,000 L. which is about 53,000 /. more than is voted, and more than is wanted. - Sir, I am for raising all the Money that has been voted, not because I believe it is all

Why was it not asked? For I beg Leave to take Notice, that so great a Confidence did the House place in the Gentlemen of this Administration, that every Thing that was asked was granted; but this is a new Way of asking, by turning a Committee of Ways and Means, into a Committee of Supply.

> ' If any Arguments are to be drawn from private OEcol nomy, I believe, we have all the Reason in the World to think, that our present Ministers will be as frugal as any that ever went before them; but, I hope, they will excuse me if I fay, that to place an implicit Confidence in any Ministers, which we do whenever we pass a Vote of Credit, is unconflitutional and unbecoming a Parliament of Great Britain. I suppose it will not be denied, that the Representatives of the People are accountable to them for all the Money that is raised upon them; but if I should be asked, why this Overplus is raised, I should be puzzled for an Answer, and, I believe, the Gentlemen on the other Side the House could furnish me with no other than this, ' That it was to make up a round Sum.'

I am fenfible, if the House agrees to this Resolution, it will not be the only Vote of Credit of this Session: The 500,000 l. for the Service of the Queen of Hungary was an absolute Vote of Credit: The many Sums granted for Contingencies in the several Estimates laid before the House; are all so many Votes of Credit, and are therefore the strongest Reason in the World against your coming into this -- It may be faid, why all this Stir about to small a Sum as 50 or . 60,000 l. I allow it is a small Sum in Comparison of the fix Millions that we have granted; but be the Sum large or fmall, the Raifing it in this Manner, by Vote of Credit, at the End of the first Session of this Parliament, is so bad a Precedent to future Sessions, that I dread the Consequence of it.

I was in hopes, that instead of increasing their Demands." the Ministry would rather have abated of them, and have left fomething in the Hands of the Parliament by way of Pledge, that all the Sums that have been granted, shall be properly applied . --- I'll fay but one Thing more: If we can't redress the People's Grievances, let us not be lavish of their Money: If we can't compais an Inquiry into past Mifmanagements, let us not lay a Foundation for future ones: IF

Your Committee now think proper, in order to avoid Repetition, to acquaint the House, that, in pursuance of their Orders, all the Persons examined before the said Committee, were examined in the most solemn Manner; and Mr. Michael Gibbons being examined, faid, he was Agent to John Account of the Boteler Esquire, who stood Candidate at the Election for a dover, Anno Member of Parliament for the Borough of Wendover in the County of Bucks, in 1735; that Mr. Boteler did, the Sa- Examination of turday Night before it came on, advise with the Examinant, Mr Gibbons rewhat was proper to be done; that the Examinant told him. Nothing could be done without 5 or 600 l. that on this, he believes. Mr Boteler told him, that he had not so much Money, but he would write a Letter to Mr Paxton; that the next Morning one Mr John Jones, who was a Friend of Mr Boteler, was fent to London, and returned on the Monday Morning to Wendover, and on his Return told the Examinant, that he had delivered a Letter to Mr Paxton, and Mr. Paxton had given him 500 l. he having at the same Time in his Hand a great Number of Bank Notes, which he told the Examinant was the 500 l. in Question, and which he immediately carried in to Mr Boteler, who foon after came out, and informed the Examinant the 500 l. was come.

Paxton at Fulbam, and gave him the Letter, and Mr Paxton, on reading it, defired the Examinant to meet him the next Day at Roger Williams's Coffee-house; that he did meet him accordingly, and Mr Paxton gave him a Parcel of Money (of which the greatest Part, if not the whole, was in Bank Notes) and told him, on delivering it, 'Here is your "Answer," the Sum, he believes, might be about 500 !. that he carried it the same Morning to Wendower, and delivered the same, or the greatest Part thereof, to Mr. Boteler.

John Boteler, Esq; examined

John Boteler, Esquire, being examined, said, that when he flood Candidate at Wendover, in 1735, he did, on Occasion of that Election, and not long before it, make an Acquaintance with Mr Paxton Sollicitor to the Treasury; that the Examinant was pushed at the Election, and wanted Money, and thinking he had some Pretensions to Favour, on Account of his having been ill used in his former Election, and knowing Mr Paxton was a Person about the Treasury that might have an Interest where the Money might be had, the Examinant, as he could not come away from Wendower without Money to defray his Charges, sent Mr John Jones to London, with a Message to Mr Paxton for Money, which Message, the Examinant believes, was a Letter for 500 /. that Mr Jones returned with the Money to the Examinant a little before the Election; that the Examinant did never give either Bond, Note, or Receipt for the Money, nor has Mr Paxton at any Time fince made a Demand either of the Money, or any Security for the same, nor did he consider himself as a Debtor for the Sum thus received.

And Mr Paxton

Mr Nicholas Paxton being examined, faid, that he knows Mr John Jones very well, and has known him for some Years; that he likewise knows Mr Boteler, formerly a Candidate at Wendover, and has known him several Years; he believes, that Mr Boteler stood Candidate for Wendower in the Year 1735, but that he was not an Agent for Mr Bateler.

Mr Paxton being further asked, if he advanced any Money to Mr Jones, on the Account of Mr Boteler, about the Time of that Election?

He faid, ' I will not answer that Question, as it may tend to accuse myself."

The Committee defired he would confider of it. To which he answered.

'I desire no Time to consider of it.'

Then he was ordered to withdraw.

And being again called in, the Question was read to him, and he was informed by the Chairman, that it was the unanimous Opinion of the Committee, that an Answer to this Question Relating to ROBERT Earl of ORFORD. 3

He faid, " I defire to be excused."

Then he was again ordered to withdraw.

And being again called in, the Chairman repeated the Question to him, and informed him, that the Committee did intiff on an Answer, and would not excuse him. To which

He faid, ' I will not answer that Question; and persisting in his Refusal, was ordered to withdraw.

Mr Paxton being, on the next Day, taken into the Custody of the Serjeant at Arms, by Order of the House, was on the Day following brought before the Committee, in order to be examined, and being again asked, if he did advance any Money to Mr John Jones, on the Account of Mr Boteler, about the Time of the Election at Wendover, in the Year 17357

He faid, ' I adhere to my former Answer;' upon which he was ordered to withdraw.

And being again called in, the Chairman by the Direction of the Committee, repeated the same Question to him, and acquainted him, that they expected he should give a positive Answer thereto. Upon which

He faid, If you will have me give a positive Answer, I do fay, I will not aniwer that Question, as it may tend to

> That, besides the Account just mentioned, there is another of Mr Paxton's ending the 22d of December 1734, now under Examination, which was delivered in to the faid Office last April was twelve Months; there lies also before the Auditor a third Account, ending the 22d of December 1736. which was delivered in the 8th Day of February last.

> And your Committee find, that, on the 8th of February last, a State of the Account of Mr Paxton, from the 22d of December 1730, (the Day of his Appointment to his Office) to the 22d of December 1732, amounting to the Sum of 28,235 1. 00 9 d. \(\frac{3}{4}\). and the Discharge whereof amounted to 26,630 l. 4 s. 5 d. was submitted to the Lords of the Trea/ury by Mr Edward Bangham, Deputy-Auditor, who has observed at the Foot of the Account, that for 3251 1. 17 s. Part of the Cravings of the faid Mr Paxton, no Receipts, or Bills of the Particulars, were produced; and that it appears by the Warrant of the Treasury, which direct the Accomptant's Allowance of 500 l. per Annum, payable out of the Exchequer, that the laid Allowance is to be, as well in lieu of Termly, and other Fees and Allowances, which he might claim for his own Pains and Service, as for Clerks, Coach-hire, and fuch other the like Charges, incident to the Execution of the faid Office; but that it is alledged by the Accomptant, that the Services before mentioned are foreign to his Business as Sollicitor of the Treasury; and that he was directed, by special Orders, to attend the same; the greatest Part of which were before his Appointment, and required his Attendance in the Country; and it appears, that this State of the faid Account, though it bears Date on the 8th of February, was not in Fact delivered into the Treasury till the 9th of February last, when your Com-An. 15. Geo. II. mittee, to their great Surprize, find, that, notwithslanding these Observations laid before the Commissioners of the Treasury by the Deputy Auditor of the Imprest, they did, the very same Morning, issue their Warrant to one of the Auditors of the Imprest, to authorize the passing and allowing of the said Account.

But though, by this Means, the Treasury did grant to Mr Paxton all the Favour in their Power, his Accounts are not yet passed; for they must be first declared, and the Declaration is the judicial Act of the Chancellor of the Exchequer; in which he can revise, and, if he sees Cause, disallow them or any part of them, notwithstanding the Warrant of the Treasury, and the Allowance of the Auditor,

Your Committee finding, that Mr Paxton had actually passed no Account, during the whole Time of his being Sollicitor to the Treasury, proceeded to enquire, whether any large Sums of publick Money had been intrusted to him, and find, that he stands Insuper 5,382 l. 18 s. 1 d. for Money paid over to him by Ms Cratcherode, when the said Mr Paxton was his Assistant; they also find, that he stands charged upon the Imprest Rolls with a Sum of 89,314 l. 19 s. 2 d. ½ upon Account; so that the whole Sum of publick Money, with which he stands charged, is no less than 94,697 l. 17 s. 3 d. ½.

It also appears to your Committee, that, besides the said Sums, they have already discovered, that Mr Thomas Low-ther, one of the Messengers of the Areasury, has paid to the said Mr Paxton one Sum of 1500 l. by virtue of a Minute of the Treasury; for which Sum neither the said Low-ther, nor the faid Paxton, are publick Accomptants.

But your Committee are utterly unable to discover, by what Arts and Methods Mr Paxton could evade railing any Account during the Time of his being Sollicitor of the Treafury, which is upwards of cleven Years; especially as it appears to your Committee, that it was the Duty of the said Treasury, to oblige him to prosecute all such Accomptants, as should appear to be in Arrear by the Certificates of the Auditors of the Impress; for your Committee find, from a Report of the faid Auditors, (which is hereunto annexed by way of Appendix) that, by a Warrant of the Treasure dated the 10th of August 1711, and figured Oxford, the Sollicitor of the Treasury is directed to take Care, that the Process be regularly issued against such impress Accomptants as shall appear to be in Arrear, by the Certificates of the Auditors of the Impreils, to the Queen's Remembrancer; as also against all Persons standing Insuper upon an Imprest,

And your Committee are at a Loss to determine, what Motives could induce the Commissioners of the Treasury, to continue the said Mr Paxton so many Years in the Office of Sollicitor of the Treasury, and to direct, that such large Sums of publick Money should, from time to time, be lodged in his Hands; when they must have been informed, by the Hall-yearly Certificates, delivered in to them by the Auditors of the Impress, that he had past no Accounts from the Time of his sirst Appointment to be Sollicitor of the Treasury, which was on the 22d of December 1730.

Further Examination of Mr Paxton.

Your Committee, the better to be enabled to discover, by what Services the said Mr Paxton could deserve such singular and extraordinary Indulgence, did, on Friday last, direct the Keeper of Newgate to bring him before them; and, upon his being called in, the former Question was again repeated to him, viz.

Did you advance any Money to Mr John Jones, on the Account of Mr Boteler, about the Time of the Election at

" Wendower in 1735?"

Upon which he defired, that his former Answer to the faid Question might be read.

Which being read accordingly;

He repeated the very same Words, viz. 'I will not an-'s swer that Question, as it may tend to accuse myself.'

Whereupon he was asked, Whether the Apprehension that it might tend to accuse himself, was his only Reason for not answering?

He faid, 'That is my principal Reason.' Whereupon he was ordered to withdraw.

And Gywn Vaughan Efg; Gwyn Vaughan Esquire ‡, being examined, he was asked, If he knew of any Sum, or Sums of Money, paid out of the Salary, or Profits, of any Place, or Office under the Government? To which he answered, 'I do not know of any, at this Time.'

Being then farther asked, If he knew of any paid within these ten Years?

He defired to know, Whether he was to include himself, or only others?

⁺ Now Lord Viscount Lymington. A Commissioner of the Customs.

Relating to ROBERT Earl of ORFORD. 9

He was then informed, that the Question was general, An. 15. Geo, II. and included all Persons.

Then he faid, that he was apprehensive, that an Answer to that Question might in part affect himself; and therefore defired to be excused answering.

Whereupon he was ordered to withdraw.

And upon his being called in again;

He was acquainted by the Chairman, that the Committee had confidered of his Objection to the Question put to him, and would not press it farther at that Time.

Your Committee are now proceeding, with all possible Difpatch, in profecuting the Enquiry into the Conduct of the Barl of Orford, during the last ten Years of his being first Commissioner of the Treasury, and Chancellor and Under-Treasurer of his Majesty's Exchequer; but they cannot conclude this Report, without representing to the House, the great Difficulty they labour under, from this obstinate and contemptu. The Observatious Behaviour of Mr Paxton, who appears to have been direct-ons of the Com-mittee on Paxly or indirectly concerned in most of the Transactions, into ton's obstinate which they have hitherto enquired; and when they confider and contemptuthe very large Sums, which have been issued to him, during our Behaviour, the Time of his being Sollicitor to the Treasury, and that no effectual Methods were ever taken to oblige him to account for any Part thereof, (a Circumstance, which could not arise from meer Negligence or Inattention) when they consider that the strong and well-grounded Remarks made on his Accounts by the Deputy-Auditor of the Imprests, were instantly followed by a Warrant of the Treasury, directing the Auditor to allow his Accounts; when they confider, what ftrong Suspicions must arise from the foregoing Evidence. that some Part, at least, of the Money in his Hands, may have been employed in Practices dangerous to the Liberties of this Nation, and dellructive of the Independency of Parliaments; they cannot help observing, that this Perseverance in refuling to answer, seems to take its Rise from a premeditated Scheme, to obstruct and frustrate their Enquiry; and, should it pass unregarded, may probably communicate itself to other Persons, whom they shall have occasion to call before them; and, by that means, render it impossible to lay a clear State of Affairs before the House.

Your Committee therefore thought themselves obliged in Duty to Report these Matters specially to the House, and do humbly submit the same to their Consideration.

Edw. Bangham, Deputy Auditors.

A Farther REPORT from the COMMITTEE of Secrecy, appointed to inquire into the Conduct of ROBERT Earl of ORFORD, during the last Ten Years of his being First Commissioner of the Treasury, and Chancellor and Under-Treasurer of his Majesty's Exchequer.

OUR Committee having, in their former Report, Ac. 16. Geo. II. laid before the House the Obstructions they met with in the Courle of their Inquiry, and finding that the Lords had refused to concur in the Means proposed by this House to remove them, by rejecting the Bill for indemnifying such Persons as shall, upon Examination, make Discoveries touching the Disposition of publick Money, or concerning the Disposition of Offices, or any Payments or Agreements in respect thereof, or concerning other Matters relating to the Conduct of Robert Earl of Orford, have not thought it adviseable to enter upon any new Matter relating to the Transactions of the Earl of Orford. But as previous to the rejecting of the faid Bill by the other House, they had several Matters before them of the highest Consequence and Importance to the Success of the War with Spain, and to the domestick OEconomy and good Order of the Kingdom. to the Payment of the Troops Abroad, to the Freedom of Elections at Home, and to the Quantity and Method of iffuing publick Money for the secret Services of the State, in all which the said Earl appears to have had the principal, if not the fole Direction; your Committee thought it their absolute Duty to lay these Matters before the House, and were preparing to do it with as much Clearness and Perspicuity, as the many notorious Difficulties and Discouragements this Inquiry has labour'd under would permit. But in the Execution of this Design, they were again interrupted by a new and unforeseen Obstruction to one of the most material Points in Question, which therefore, together with the other Matters abovementioned, they find themselves under a Necessity of laying before the House.

As the vigorous and successful Prosecution of the War in America seems to have been the great Object of the Interests and Inclination of the People of Great Britain; and as an Expedition to a Climate so distant and dangerous, must unavoidably be attended with an immense Expence both of Men and Money to the Nation, your Committee therefore, considering how effentially it must affect the Glory of his

Ma-

An. 16. Geo. II. Majesty's Arms, and the Justice due to this Nation, that those of their Countrymen, who chearfully undertook a Service, where the Enemy was the least Danger they were exposed to, should be justly and fully paid the great Sums raised to support them, have thought it their Duty to inquire into the Contract made for supplying his Majesty's Forces going upon the Expedition with Lord Catheart, and to examine whether it had been established on the most just and advantageous Foot, for Troops so peculiarly deserving the Care and Attention of the Publick. And in proceeding

Account of the plying Money for paying the Forces fent to the West-Indies.

Your Committee find, that the Money, or rather the Contract for sup- Currency of Jamaica, is of a less Value than Sterling Money; and, by the Examination of Merchants, it appears, that for fome Years before the Commencement of the War with Spain, the Rate of Exchange between Jamaica and England was from 135 to 140, but generally at 140, very few Bills having been drawn under that Rate; that is, Perfons at Jamaica generally paid 140 l. of the Currency of that Country, for a Bill which intitled them, or their Agents, to 100 l. Sterl. in England.

> Your Committee find, that on the 9th of July 1740, the following Proposal was made to the Treasury for furnishing Money at Jamaica for the Expedition under Lord Catheart. by Peter Burrel and Yohn Briftow, Efgrs. Members of this Meff. Burrell's and Briftow's Proposal for that House. Purpole.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners of his Majefly's Treasury, the Proposal of Peter Burrel and John Brillow:

"That they are ready to furnish at Jamaica his Majesty's Forces going upon the intended Expedition with Lord · Catheart, with any Sums of Money, and at the Times which the Service shall require, at the Rate of 100 l. Sterl. for every 120 1. paid at Jamaica in the Currency of that Island; that the Sum of 27,000 l. be paid to them before the Departure of the Troops, they furnishing their Bills at Sight on Jamaica for the Amount thereof, at the abovementioned Rate of 100 l. Sterl. for 120 l. Jamaica Currency. That the subsequent Payments be made upon their producing the Deputy-Paymaster's Bills or Receipts, who shall be directed to give the same for the Sums they fhall receive from Time to Time.

Landon, July 9. 1740.

PETER BURRELL IOHN BRISTOW.

This Proposal was the same Day agreed to by the Commissioners of the Treasury, the Earl of Orford being then present at the Board, which appears the more extraordinary to your Committee, because the Commissioners of the Trea- An. 16. Geo. II. fury (had they thought fit to inquire) must have found, that for feveral Months preceding the Date of this Proposal, all the Bills drawn from Jamaica for the Service of his Majesty's Navy and Ordnance, were drawn at the Rate of 140 /. for

Your Committee also observe, that at the Time of the Delivery of this Proposal, it could be no Secret to Mr Burrell and Mr Brifton that the Exchange from Jamaica was 140 1. for your Committee find in the Minutes of a Court of Directors of the South-Sea Company, when Mr Burrel Sub-Governor, and Mr Bristow Deputy-Governor, were present, the following Order:

Friday, March 16, 1738 9.

· Ordered. That it be referred to the Committee of Correspondence to consider, and report their Opinion concerning the Exchange from Jamaica, which is now at 140 l. for 100 l. Sterl. and yet the Company are not credited for the Dollars, Pistoles, and Bar-Gold, more than when the Exchange was at 135 per Cent.'

The Circumstances which preceded and occasioned this extraordinary Transaction, as far as your Committee have been able to trace them, are of a very fingular Nature; for it appears by the Examination of Captain Alexander Examination of Wilson, who was Agent to Lord Catheart, when he was Capt. Wilson preparing for the Expedition to the West-Indies, which is relating thereto. annexed in the Appendix, (No. 2.) That in May or June preceding this Contract, the Paymaster General communicated to Lord Catheart a Method of paying the Troops, which his Lordship approved of; this was by sending a Sum of Money by the Deputy-Paymaster, who was to attend the Expedition, and impowering him to draw what Bills should be necessary, and directing the Troops to be paid at Jamaica, at such a Rate of Exchange, as should appear to Lord Catheart and the superior Officers to be most advantageous to the Troops; and it being intimated some Time aster to Lord Catheart, that a Contract for paying the Troops, at 120 l. Jamaica Money, for 100 l. Sterl. was then depending before the Treasury, he immediately procured a Meeting with Mr Hanbury Williams, Paymaster of the Marines, Mr Burrel and Mr Briftow, with a View, if possible, to get the Troops paid in a more advantageous Manner, for he did not apprehend the Contract was at that Time passed. At this Meeting he mentioned the Inconveniencies which might arise from the paying the Men at a Rate so much lower than the known Exchange, and the Danger there was from what he had observed Abroad, of its producing Dil-

Jamaica Money for 100 1. Sterl. and that they could not do it for less Profit.

> From the Examinations of Mr Burrell and Mr Brillow. (which are annexed in the Appendix (No. 3) it appears, that they applied for this Contract to the Earl of Orford, and to no other Person; for when it was publickly known that the Troops were going to Jamaica, Mr Eurrell acquainted the faid Earl, that he had Correspondence in Jamaica, on the South-Sea Company's Account, who were Men of great Credit, and had the greatest Command of Money of any in the Place, and he thought, if Money was wanted there. he could supply the Government as well as any Body; and that afterwards, confidering the great Importance of the Affair, he thought it too much Hazard for himself alone. and mentioned it to Mr Briflow, and they together fettled the Terms of their Propolal; and about the Month of June, 1740, the Parliament being then prorogued, they waited on the Earl of Orford, and proposed to him the same Terms, which were afterwards agreed to by the Treasury; the faid Earl asked them if these were the lowest Terms, and hoped they would not ask more than was reasonable, or what any Body else should complain of; that he would not take it on himself, but defired them to make their Proposals to the

Alfo of Charles Hanbury Williams, Eiq;

And your Committee having also examined Charles Hanhury Williams, Efg; a Member of this House, touching the Conversation that passed between Mr Burrell, Mr Bristone, and Lord Catheart, at Mr Williams's Office, have also added his Examination to the others in the Appendix (No. 2.)

Treasury, which feems to your Committee to have been entirely Matter of Form; for it appears that when this Propofal was accordingly delivered to the Treasury, the Gentlemen cannot recollect to whom it was delivered, nor when nor by whom they were informed of its being accepted; nay one of the Gentlemen even does not remember, whether they themselves went with the Proposal when it was presented.

to which they beg Leave to refer.

Your Committee cannot find that any Notice or Intimation was given to any Person, except what passed between the Earl of Orford and the Contractors, as is before mentioned, of the Intention of the Treasury to make this Contract; for it appears by the Examination of James Knight, Esq; which is annexed in the Appendix (No. 4.) that when he heard the Troops were going to Jamaica, and was told the Treasury would contract with private Persons for paying them, he did himself intend to make an Offer of furnishing

he Money, but in very few Days after, he heard the Trea- An. 16. Geo. II. ury had agreed with Mr Burreil and Mr Brillow, at the Rate of 120 /. and he did not believe the Treasury ever gave any Notice of their Intentions to make any fuch Contract. That what he expected was not a formal publicle Notice, but that it should have been communicated to Merchants, as he has heard has been practifed in Queen Anne's Wars, and had this been done, he believes several besides himself would have proposed, and that he himself would have furnished the Money at 130 l. per Cent. for 100 l. Sterl. and should have thought it a good Bargain, provided he could have had the fame Money advanced to him which he has heard was advanced to Mr Burrel and Me Briftone; that after the first Difficulty, which would be on the Arrival of the Troops, was over, he did not doubt but he could have contracted with the People of the Island to furnish the Money at the Rate of 1371, and if the whole Money was advanced to him here beforehand, and he was only to fend it over and furnish it at Jamaica at the Rate of 130 1. per Cent. he thinks he should make 12, or 15 per Cent. per Annum of the Sums he furnished, by returning the same Money twice a Year.

This led your Committee into a Computation of the Profits which might have been made on this Contract, which they conceive to fland thus:

If the Value of 100 l. Sterl. be fent to Jamaica in Moi- The Commitdores, it appears they will produce 143 1. 10 1. Jamaica tee's Observation Currency; but by this Contract, only 120 1. Jamaica ens on the Inin-Currency was to be paid at Jamaica for every 100 l. Sterl. ries done to the received here: To this 120 l. Jamaica Currency, all the ne- the Publick by ceffary Charges must be added, which your Committee con- the above Conceive to be 1 1. per Cent. Commission, 21, per Cent. Infu-tract. rance, 1 1. per Cent. Freight, and & per Cent. for the Charges of Shipping; in all, 4 l. 15 s. per Cent. which on 120 l. Jamaica Currency, is 5 /. 14 : of the same Currency, in all 125 1. 141. Jamaica Currency. So that the Profit to be made on leading Moidores, was the Difference between 125 / 145. and 143 1. 10 s. which is 17 1. 16 s. Jamaica Currency, or 12 L. S z. Id. Steel, out of every 100 L. Steel, which is 14 L. 3 s. e d. J. per Cent. Steel. And your Committee observe; that if half of the Sum tent had been in Six and Thirty-Shilling Pieces, and only half in Moideres, 100 l. Stirl fo fent would have produced 141 1 Jamaica Currency, which is only 2 1. 10 s. Jumai a Currency leis than Moidores alone would have produced.

And your Committee cannot help chierving, that if the Treasury had thought fit to send in Moidares to Jamana, on the Account of the Publick, the fame Sums of Mosey

An. 16. Geo. II. which they actually advanced to the Contractors, then every 100 l. Sterl. so sent would have produced 143 l. 10 s. Jamaica Currency, except what may be allowed for Infurance, which your Committee is informed amounts to about 2 1 per Cent. on Money fent by Ships of War. Nor could frequent Opportunities have been wanting of fending, on Board his Majetty's Ships, such farther Supplies of Money as might at any Time have been necessary for that Service. But if it had been thought more adviseable to have supplied Part of this Expence by Draughts from thence, there can be no Doubt but that the Deputy-Paymaster being furnished with a proper Proportion of Spec.e from hence, would have been able to keep up the Exchange at 140 /. and in that Case no Charge would have attended that Part so supplied.

It further appears, that in the Course of this Affair, and before the Departure of Lord Catheart, still greater Indulgences were granted to the Contractors; for by their first Proposal the Sum of 27,000 l. only was to be advanced them by the Treasury before the Departure of the Troops, but the subsequent Payments were not to be made to them till they produced the Deputy-Paymaster's Bills or Receipts: And yet on the 30th of September following, which was before the Departure of the Troops, 12,000 l. was further advanc'd to them by the Paymaster-General, for their Bill of that Date; and on the 1st of Octaber 9500 l. more was advauced to them by the Paymaster of the Marines, for their Bill of the 30th of September; and on the 23d of December a Sum of 12000 l. was advanced by the Paymatter-General, for their Bill of that Day's Date; and on the 6th of January, a farther Sum of 9000 l. was advanced by the Paymaster of the Marines for their Bill of the atth of December. All in Consequence of Minutes of the Treasury. as in the Appendix, No. 5.

Here your Committee cannot help observing that the paying these Sums amounting to 42,500 % over and above the 27,000 % originally advanced before there had been any Difbursements on the Part of the Contractors, altered the Nature of the Contract, and render'd it much more beneficial than as it was originally proposed by the Contractors themselves.

Mr Burrel said, he did offer the Half of his Share to his Brother, and a Gentleman engaged in Business with them. but they thought it too great a Risque for them to run: He likewise mentioned it to another Gentleman (whom he did not name) who would not accept of it, that these Refusals were very early before any Thing was done in it, more than passing the Contract, and that he mentioned them, to shew that he thought he had no great Bargain of it. And from the Examination of Mr Burrel and Mr Briflow, it farther An. 16. Geo. II. appears, that some Time after the making of the Contract, they offered Mr Monjon, a Member of this House, one fourth Part of it, as far as it related to the Payment of the Troops in the Office where he is Deputy, which he accepted of, and has shared accordingly the Profits of this Contract from the Beginning; and some Time after the Earl of Orford mentioned to Mr Burrel, that Mr Hanbury Williams had defired him to speak to him, Mr Burrel, that one of Mr Williams's Friends might have a Share in the Remittances, but he added, You are to do just as you please, I don't ask you to let any Body in, for the Contract is yours; and foon afterwards Mr Hanbury Williams spoke to the Contractors, and told them, that he had a Relation, one Mr Hanbury, a West-India Merchant, to whom he had Obligations; and as he had Money and Effects at Famaica, he defired he might be concerned one fourth Part with them for the future, which he has accordingly been, in what relates to the Payment of the Marines in Mr Hanbury Williams's Office.

And it appears to your Committee, that neither the one nor the other of those Gentlemen advanced any Money, or were concerned in the Management, but were to be Shar-ers of the Profit or Loss only.

And it farther appears to your Committee, that on the Arrival of the Troops at Jamaica, and the tendering the Money to them at 120 1. Jamaica Currency, great Difcontents were expressed by the Officers, and some actually refused to receive it, and with Time the Discontent increafed, and nothing was talk'd of so much among the Officers of the Army, as the Hardship of being paid at 120 1. when the Exchange was at 140 /. every one of them became a Calculator, and complain'd he lost 16 1. 6 1. on every 100 1. he being paid his 120 l. Jamaica Money, with 62 Moidores, which is no more than 83 l. 14 s. Sterl. all which appears by the Letters of Colebroke and General Wentworth, annexed in the Appendix, No. 6. so truly were the Fears of Lord Catheart verify'd.

And this Uneafiness among the Troops was greatly increased by the peremptory Refusal of the Agents of Mr Burrel and Mr Briftow, to furnish the Deputy-Paymaster at Jamaica with any Money upon their Credit, arifing, as Mr. Colebroke fays in his Letter of the 20th of February, 1740, Mark'd (B) in the Appendix, (No. 6.) from their Views of appropriating the Profit to themselves, and being dazzled with the Prospect of getting 15 or 20 per Cent. instead of 2 fer Cent. their Commission. Upon this the Deputy-Paymaster took up Money from other Persons, and gave

An. 16. Geo. II. them Bills on the Paymaller-General; and the' there were. as appears by the Extracts of Letters of the Deputy-Paymaster, of the 20th of February, and the 23d of March, 1740-1, which are mark'd (B and D) in the Appendix, (No. 6.) Combinations to diffress him, yet the first Bills he thus drew were at the Rate of 130 l. and he, by Degrees, raised the Exchange, so that at last he drew at 140 %. whilst the Troops still continued to be paid at 120 1.

> And it further appears to your Committee, that on the 5th of June, 1741, there is entered in the Treasury-Books

the following Minute:

' Mr Briftow, one of the Remitters for the West Indies, is called in, and acquaints my Lords, that he and Mr Burrel have discharged such of their Factors and Agents * at Jamaica, as misbehaved themselves in their Conduct about supplying the Money for the publick Service there ; ' and that as General Wentavorth has applied for the Troops . to be paid at the Rate of 125 per Cent. he will take " Care that the Remittance shall be made accordingly."

And on the 10th of July following, the Commissioners of the Treasury agree and order, 'That Messes, Burrell and Brifford pay the Troops in America at the Rate of 125 1. Jamaica Currency for 100 1. Sterl. from the 24th of

" April preceding."

Now your Committee observe, on this new Contract, first proposed on the 5th of June, 1741, and finally regulated on the 10th of July following, that Mr Colebrooke, the Deputy-Paymaster at Jamaica, did on the 24th of Feb. preceding, being 19 Weeks before the fettling of the faid Contract, draw Bills on the Paymaster-General to the Amount of 1250 L. all at the Rate of 130 L. and did in his Letter of the 23d of March before mentioned, acquaint the Paymaster-General that he had happily overcome all Opposition, and could affure him on good Grounds, that whatever Money might be necessary to be raised for the Service, would be found at Jamaica, for Bills on the Paymaster General for 130 % and upwards, and this last Letter is dated above ten Weeks before the Proposal of Mr Burrel and Mr Bristow, to amend their Contract, and above fifteen Weeks before the final Acceptation of that Proposal by the Treasury; and it is worthy of Observation that in the Months of January, February, March, April and May, preceding the July in which this second Contract at 125 l. was established by the Treasury, there were drawn from Jamaica, no less than 39 Bills for the Service of his Majesty's Navy, most of them at the Rate of 135 % and the Remainder at the Rate of 140 %.

And it appears to your Committee, that feveral Bills nmounting to the Sum of 11392 l. 17 s. were drawn on the

Paymaster

Paymafter of the Marines by his Deputy, between the 18th Ap. 16. Geo. 11. of Feb. 1740, and the 1st of August, 1741, Part of which Bills amounting to 5000 L were drawn in the Month of February, preceding the new Contract; that thele Bills were paid by Mr Burrel and Mr Briffore, and that Money was issued to them for that Purpose by the Paymaster of the Marines. But, your Committee have not been able to discover at what Rate of Exchange they were drawn, nor does it appear whether Mr Burrell and Mr Brifford have been allowed to take the Profit arising from the Difference between 120%. the Rate of the Contract, and the Rate of Exchange the Bills were drawn at.

And it further appears to your Committee, that the Bills drawn by the Deputy-Paymaster from Jamaica, on the Paymalter General, when the Agents of Mr Burrel and Mr. Brifford refused to supply him, amounting to the Sum of 20216 J. gs. 3 d. and which were drawn in the Months of February and Mereb, 1740, and in April, May, June, July and August, 1741, at 130%. 135%. 137 1%. and at last at 140 /. were fent for Payment to Mr Burrell and Mr Briftons. and also that Money was issued from the Pay-Office to them to discharge the said Bills; altho' it does not appear to your Committee what Pretence of Right the Contractors could have to the Profit arising from any of their Bills, after the Forfeiture of their Bargain by the Refusal of their Agents to furnish the Deputy-Paymallers at Jamaica.

But the' thefe Bills were thus paid by Meff. Burrell and Briflow, yet your Committee find that on the 15th of December latt, the Paymaster-General made a Representation of this Matter to the Treasury, as in the Appendix (No. 7.) praying a Direction of the Commissioners whether the Profit or Difference arising by the Exchange on the faid Bills should be accounted for, and paid to the Agents of the faid Contractors, or referved in the Hands of his Deputy for the Use and Benefit of the Public: And your Committee find the fol-

Whitehall, Treasury-Chamber, 29th Dec. 1741.

Read also to my Lords a Memorial from the faine Pay-' master, dated the 15th Inst. relating to the Remittance of

Pay for the Troops in America, with respect to the Ja-' maica Currency, and ordered a Copy thereof to be fent to the Remitters for their Answer thereto."

To which the Remitters gave in their Answer, annexed in the Appendix (No. 8.) in which it is remarkable, that in flating the feveral Charges upon fending over Specie to Jamaica, they make one Charge in the following Words; Three per Cent. Commission we pay in Jamaica: Whereas it appears by their Examinations, that they paid One per

C ent.

An. 16. Geo. II. Cent. only to their Agent, Mr Colebrooke, for the Money 1742. fent out with Lord Catheart.

This Answer was received on the 5th of Feb. last, and Nothing appears to have been done upon it while the Earl of Orford continued in the Treasury.

Your Committee have been obliged to dwell the longer upon this Contract, because the whole Behaviour of the Earl of Orford, who had the sole Direction of it, seems so extraordinary, that they sear this Part of their Report would want Credit, if they had not descended into the most minute Particulars of it.

Here they find a Contract entered into upon the good Faith of the Proposers only, with an Ignorance of the Value of the Exchange, whether real or affected does not appear to your Committee; and that Defect so far from being endeavoured to be supplied, by admitting Proposals or Information from any other Merchants, that it seemed a determined Point to shut it out, even when it seemed to obtrude itself, upon him, from the very Offices subject to his Inspection.

But as if this Injury to the Troops and Injustice to the Nation, had been too little, he rendered this Contract more advantageous to the Contractors than their most finguine Expectation originally suggested to them.

For tho' by the Terms of the Contract the Public was to advance 27000 l. only, in Money, yet we find the further Sum of 42000 l advanced to them before the Arrival of the Troops in America.

And your Committee observe, that the Shares of the Profits of this Contract were dealt out to the Deputy of the Pay-Office, and to a Friend of the Paymaster of the Marines, at the Request of the said Paymaster, without any Advance of Money or Trouble on their Part, and it is very remarkable that these Shares were confined to the Sums issued from the respective Offices.

And here your Committee must observe, from the whole Course of this Proceeding, that neither the Interest of the Soldier, or the Public, seemed to have been the Object of the Earl of Orford's Attention.

The Cries of the injured Soldiers, who had lost one Day's. Pay in seven, where Provisions of all Kinds bear an excessive Price, made so little Impression, that the only Relief they obtained was an Advance of their Pay upon the Contract from 120 l. to 125 l. tho' there had been drawn upon the Navy-Office, during the fix Months preceding, several Bills, none at less than 135 l. and some at 140 l. and tho the Deputy to the Paymaster-General likewise, 19 Weeks before, had drawn upon the Office at 130 l. and 15 Weeks before had written to the Paymaster-General, that he might depend

DOOR

Contractors Agents to furnish him with Money.

Your Committee cannot but observe that the Treasury, in establishing this new Contract, where the Contractors proposed the Advance from 120 l. to 125 l. to commence from the 5th of June, 1741. order it with a Retrospect, and to commence from the 24th of April preceding, and are greatly at a Loss to find if the first Contract was upon just and equal Terms, why the Contractors submitted to any Advance at all; and if it was not upon equal Terms, why the Treasury did not extend their Retrospect, and order it to be rectified from the Commencement.

fied from the Commencement.

And so little was the Public

And so little was the Public to avail itself of this Injustice to the Soldier, that when the Contractors could furnish no Money at all, from their Agents refusing to answer their Credit, and consequently the Contract was dissolved, and the Army must have starved, if the Deputy-Paymaster, who is the Officer of the Public, had not procured Money by Draughts upon the Pay-Office, at 130, 135, up to 140 Jamaica Currency, for 100 l. Sterling; yet those very Bills were suffered to be paid by the Contractors, and public Money issued to them to pay the same, but by whose Orders does not appear to your Committee; as if the Profits arising from the advanced Prices of those Bills, drawn by a public Officer upon the Public, had belonged to the Contractors.

And your Committee observe, that when on the 15th of December last, the Paymaster prayed Directions from the Treasury, whether the Profits on those Bills should be paid to the Contractors, or reserved for the Benefit of the Public, even that could not be obtained, while the Earl of Orford remained in the Treasury.

Your Committee now proceed to lay before you, the great The Commit-Part which the Earl of Orford appears to have had in feveral tee's Remarks Transactions which nearly concern the Freedom of Elections, on the Earl of and the Independency of Parliament, and they have the great-factions relating off Reason to believe, that had the Persons employed in these to Elections dark Transactions been properly indemnified, many Discoveries would have been made of the utmost Importance.

Your Committee having in their former Report laid before you the Share which Mr Paxton and Mr Lawton had in carrying on Profecutions relating to the Borough of Orford, and particularly that Lawton had declared, that he did not pretend to by he should not be re-imbursed his Expences on

An. 16. Geo. 11. that Head, think fit now to acquaint you, that Mr Abraham

ing to the Bo-

Farley being examined, said, that about January, 1736, Mr. Lawton told him there was an Order made out at the Trea-Examination of sury, in his (Parley's) Name, for 1200 /. and bid him go Mr Farley relat- and receive it, which he did, and paid it over immediately rough of Orford; to the faid Lawton.

And of Mr Banks:

And Mr Richard Banks, upon his Examination, faid, that John Lawton, Esq; of the Exchequer, appeared to be his Client in the Profecutions relating to Orford, tho' he did not know what Relation Mr Lawton had to the Borough of Orford, but believed, that what Mr Lawton did was to oblige Sir Robert Walpole, to whom he apprehended Lawton was under Obligations; that the whole Bill of near 2000 L which the Profecutions amounted to, was never fatisfied; that Mr Lawton, Paxton, and he (Banks) met about it, and after a good deal of Time allowed to examine the Bill, they on the 15th of December, 1736, came to a stated Account, when there was a Balance of 1200 and odd Pounds in his (Banks's) Favour, which Mr Lawton agreed he would pay in a Fortnight's Time, and he did foon after pay 500 L to Paxton, who paid Banks 100 l. thereof, and promised soon to pay more, the remaining 700 and odd Pounds have not been yet paid; that he (Banks) did about two Years ago file a Bill against Paxton in Chancery, to bring him to an Account; that in this Bill Mr Lanuton was made a Defendant, and that Lawton in his Answer did swear, that he detained the 700 l. in his Hands, to reimburse himself what was due to him from Paxton, and to secure the 200 L still unpaid to Mr Masterman for his Bill.

Alfo of Mr Martin,

Mr Leonard Martin, an Attorney, and Partner with his Father-in-Law, Mr Paxton, being examined, faid that he has been concerned in feveral Suits about the Borough of Colchester, and that he had his chief Directions therein from Mr Daniel, an Attorney at Colchefter, tho' Mr Lawton sometimes interfered, and that foon after Lawton's Death, he received a Letter from Daniel, as annexed in the Appendix, (No. 9.) that he received 133 l. for Fines, to which the Profecutors were entitled, that he believed he advised with Lacuton about framing a Petition to the Treasury for the King's remaining two Thirds of the Fine, that Lawton (who feemed very defirous of Success in the Affair of that Corporation) approved of it, and he believed Lawton might fay he would speak about it, that he (diartin) thereon drew the Draught of a Petition, and sent it to Daniel to get signed, and on its Return he procured a Warrant from the Treasury, directing Paxton to pay him 280 /. that the Warrant was dated the 10th of July, 1741, and that he received the Money on the 26th of January last, and did imagine these Profecutions. fecutions were with a View of influencing the Election, and An. 16. Geo. II. to turn the Borough, and to get out the Mayor, and get the Returning Officer.

By all this it appears that the Management of this Affair was lodged in the Hands of Paxton's Partner and Son-in-Law, and the Expences attending it were in Part paid by the faid Paxton in Consequence of a Warrant of the Treasury. But tho' your Committee here met with a fresh Inslance of the Sollicitor of the Treasury intermedling in Matters relating to Elections, yet they did not think fit to examine him again, having little Reason to expect he would make any Discoveries after the other House had rejected the Bill by which he would have been indemnified. And your Committee cannot determine what could induce the Earl of Orford to continue Paxton in his Office upwards of 11 Years, and to fuffer him to defer accounting for any Part of the large Sums, which were from Time to Time islaed to him till the 9th of February last, and then to account for two Years only in so precipitate a Manner, but must submit to the Judgment of this House, whether that Indulgence was owing to a criminal Neglect, or to a more criminal Confederacy.

Your Committee now proceed to lay before you a Transaction relating to the Borough of Weymouth.

Mr Richard Jordan being examin'd, faid, That he was Examination of Mayor of Weymouth and Molcomb Regis in the Year 1740. Mr Jerdan, relat-That on the 16th Day of June, in that Year, Mr Pearle and rough of Wey-Mr Olmins came down to Weymouth; that Mr Pearle applied mouth and Melto him (Jordan) and defired his Vote and Interest for himself comb Regio. and Mr Olmius, and two others in petto, whom he did not name; and told him at the same Time, that there would be a Letter produced, obliging him and all the Officers in the Service to vote for Mr Pearle and his Friends. That then Mr Prarfe defired him to go with him in private: That when they were alone Mr Pearfe faid he was defirous to have the Corporation filled up, and that a Hall should be called for that Purpose. And he further requested, that he (Jurdan) would meet him (Mr Olmius) and some other Friends; but Mr Jordan refused to meet Mr Olmius; and then Mr Pearfe left him. That on the 18th of June Mr Pearje came to his House about Noon, and told him, that if he would come into the Measures of him (Pearsi) and his Friends, and fill up the Corporation, in order to have a Returning-Officer, or Words to that Effect, he had it in Commission to say, That he (Jurden) should have the Collection of the Port of Weymouth in a Mouth's Time, and a Letter from Sir Robert Walpole, under his own Hand, to make good that Promife. Mr Pearle then went from his Honfe, and return'd about Four of the Clock of the lame Day, and brought to him a Lift 8742. OF

in. 16. Geo. II. then Collector, and Mr Bryor, which Alterations took Place; that Mr Olmius generally transacted with Sir Robert Walpole every thing about the Election; that he (Pearse) apprehended that all the Removes that were to be made were with a View to influence the Election; and Mr Olmius and he went together to Sir Robert Walpole to consult on Measures for carrying on the Election, but he believes that the Scheme was not shewed Sir Robert Walpole but only talked over with him. He further faid, that when he was at Weymouth in the Summer 1740, he was told by Mr Jordan, the then Mayor, if ne was made Collector in the Room of Mr Tixzard, that he would fill up the Corporation in order to chose a returning Officer against the general Election; but that he (Jordan) would not think of doing any fuch thing unless he faw a Letter of it under Sir Robert Walpole's own Hand: That when he came to London he did acquaint Sir Robert with the Defire of Mr Jordan, and he (Pearse) had a Letter from him, the Purport of which was, that whatever Friends Mr Pearse should recommend, he (Sir Robert Walpole) would endeavour to provide for: That he is well acquainted with Sir Robert Walpole's Hand, and believes the Letter to be of his Writing: That Mr Franklin, a Clergyman, Brother-in-Law to Mr Jordan, was particularly mentioned in the Letter; Sir Robert Walpole faying he would use his Endeavour to get him any Living that should become vacant in the Gift of the Crown, or of the Lord Chancellor: That he (Pearle) returned with this Letter to Wegmouth, and did shew it to Mr Franklyn, and he believes to Mr Jordan, and he thinks it was in a Conversation he had with Mr Jordan in Mr Tizzard's Summer-House; but that Mr Jordan flew from the Proposal, saying, Employments might be given one Day, and taken away the next; which much furprised him, and in a Day or two he quitted the Borough and came to London: That he did not know but after the Election was over he might fay to Mr Franklyn, Have at your Charter: That he did not know what was become of Sir Robert Walpole's Letter, but he believed he has fince burn'd it. That when he returned from Wermouth. after Mr Jordan's Refusal, he call'd on Sir Robert Walpole, and told him he had been disappointed in his Scheme; that Sir Robert encouraged him to proceed, and he was told by Mr Olmius, that Sir Robert Walpole had recommended to him (Olmius) Mr Cholmondeley and Mr Plummer, to join with him (Q/mius) and that he (Pearfc) did join with them. John Olmius, Esq; being examined, said, that there was a rough Scheme of Alteration in the Officers of the Revenue at

who were mentioned to be advanced had all Interest in Wey. An. 16. Geo. Your Committee find that the thefe Endeavours of the Earl of Orford to influence the Voters of Weymouth, and to procure a proper returning Officer by thus placing and difplacing the Officers of the Revenue, did at that Time prove ineffectual; yet just before the Election came on, another Attempt was made of the same Nature, tho' with as little Success as before.

For Mr Ezekiel Pomeroy, Chief Clerk to the Clerk of the Mr Pomeroy's Cheque at Depiford, being examined, faid, ' That on or Examination r?about Monday the 27th of April 1741, Eight or Ten Day's Borough. before the Weymouth Election came on, the Reverend Mr Morgan came to his House at Deptford, between Five and Six o' Clock in the Morning, and asked him if he was willing to go on a particular Mcsage to Mr Tucker at Weymonth, which would be of fingular Service to Mr Tucker as well as to him (Pomeroy); that he answered, he was willing to do any Thing which could be of any Service either to Mr Tucker or himself, but that he must have Leave to be abfent from Duty: Mr Morgan told him he was going to Town to wait on Sir Robert Walpole, and he would return as foon as possible; and about Two o'Clock in the Afternoon of the same Day Morgan returned to him again, and told him he had got Leave for him, for Sir Robert Walpole had written a Letter to Sir Jacob Ackevorth for Leave, that Sir Robert had inquired much of Morgan who Pomeroy was, and if he might be fafely depended on; and that Morgan faid he had answered to Sir Robert Walpole for his Fidelity; and between Three and Four o'Clock in the Afternoon of the same Day, he (Pomeray) came to Town with Morgan, who carried him to the Crozun-Tavern behind the Exchange, where they met Mr Olmius, and they three dined together; and after Dinner Mr Olmins told him (Pomeroy)

lating to the faid

Farther Report of the SECRET COMMITTEE

An. 16. Geo. II. that he found by Mr Morgan he was willing to go on a Mesfage to Mr Tucker; he (Pomeroy) then asked him, what the Message was, and Mr Olmius told him, if he would go down to Mr Tucker, and tell him that if he would but agree to take him, (Olmius) Mr Pearse, and another Friend who was not mentioned, he (Olmius) was commissioned by Sir Robert Walpole, to affure him (Tucker) that every Friend of his that had been displaced, should have their Places again, or any others that Mr Tucker should please to ask; and as for Mr Tucker himself, he should have any Thing he would be pleafed to ask, and that if he (Tucker) doubted of the Veracity of the Message, and either he or his Brother would come to Town, they should be fully fatisfy'd of the Truth of it; and that he (Pomeroy) was not to communicate this Message to any Persons, but to the Tuckers, and his (Pomeroy's) Father, who had been Post-master, but was then out; upon this he observed to Mr Olmius, that Mr Pearse, who was his Patron, was then in Dorsetsbire, that he would wonder to see him, and would ask him Questions; and he defired to know if he might be at Liberty to acquaint him, (Pearse) with the Message. On this Mr Olmius faid he would write to Mr Pearle, and he did write a Letter to him, which he gave unseal'd to him, (Pomeroy) who read it two or three Times, and it was in Subitance as follows.

MrOlmius'sLetcation.

In Consequence of this, he (Pomeroy) set out Post the next Morning, which was on Tuejday, for Weymouth, and arrived there on Wednesday at Nine in the Morning; that he waited on Mr Tucker, and found him and his Brother both together; he told them the Particulars of the Message from Mr Olmius, and he was answered by Mr Tucker, that a Proposal of that Kind was absolutely too late, that his Word and Honour was engaged, and he would not go from it for any Confideration. He farther said, that Mr Tucker asked him if he had brought any Letter from Sir Robert Walpole, to which he faid, No. He farther faid, that Mr Morgan and Mr Olmius had often told him, that if Mr Tucker and his Friends refused to agree with Mr Olmius, and join their Interest to his, it would be the total Ruin of Mr Tucker and his Brother, and he Overthrow of the Charter.

To fuch notorious Attacks as these upon the Freedom of The Commit-Elections. your Committee apprehend, are owing the great, tee's Observatiand possibly unwarrantable Expences that particular Persons on the Atmay have been drove to engage in. Some Expences the Laws tacks made upon the Freedom of allow, by regulating the Manner of them; and those who Elections, by the engage in illicit Expences, are subject to heavy penal Laws, above Proceedbut there are none particularly adapted to the Case of a Mi. ings. nitter who clandestinely employs the Money of the Public. and the whole Power and profitable Employments that attend the collecting and discosing of it, against the People; and by this Profusion and criminal Distribution of Offices, in some Measure justifies the Expence that particular Persons are obliged to be at, by making it necessary to the Preservation of all that is valuable to a Free Nation. For in that Case the Contell is plain and visible. It is, whether the Commons shall retain the Third State in their own Hands, whillt this whole Dispute is carried on at the Expence of the People;

Mr Pearle and Mr Tucker were Members for Waymouth in the last Parliament; but upon the latter's accepting the Office of Surveyor of the King's Quarries in Portland, Mr Olmius was elected in his Room.

An. 16# Geo. II. but on the Side of the Minister, out of the Money granted to support and secure the Constitutional Independency of the Three Branches of the Legislature.

This Method of Corruption is as fure, and therefore your Committee apprehends as criminal a Way of subverting the Constitution, as by an armed Force. It is a Crime productive of a total Destruction of the very Being of this Government; and is so high and unnatural, that nothing but the Powers of Parliament reach it; and as it can never meet with parliamentary Animadversions, but when it is unsuccessful, it must seek for its Security in the Extent and Efficacy of the Mischief it produces; and therefore your Committee apprehend it is the more necessary for your Consideration, for while it wants of Success, it leaves an Opportunity to preserve and maintain your Independency for the suture.

The E. of Orford's Conduct relating to Mo-ney for Secret Service.

Your Committee now proceed to lay before you the Conduct of the Earl of Orford, with relation to the Quantity and Manner of iffuing and receiving that Part of the Public Money, granted for the Support of the Civil Government, which has been employed in what is commonly called Secret

Your Committee, having been informed that this Money had been issued under three different Denominations, called for an Account hereunto annexed, (No. 10.) of all the Sums issued for Secret Service, or for his Majesty's immediate or special Service, (the Money issued to his Majesty's privy Purse excepted) or to reimburse Expences during the last Ten Years in which Robert Earl of Orford was first Commissioner of the Treasury, &c. And the Account having been laid before them from the Auditor of the Exchequer's Office, there appeared to be issued under these three Heads only, including the annual Sum of 3000 l. paid to each of the Secretaries of State for Secret Services, the Sum of 1,453,400 l. 61. 2 d.

Remarks of the Committee thereupon.

The issuing such an immense Part of the Money, given for the Support of the Civil Government, to these particular Uses, during a Time of profound Tranquility till the late Rupture with Spain, greatly alarmed your Committee, and put them upon examining what Sums had been issued for the same Services in a former Period of the like Number of Years. And your Committee beg Leave to represent to you that exorbitant as this Sum may feem, they would have suppressed this Part of their Report, if by the Comparison they had entred upon, they could any Ways have reconciled their Silence upon this Head, to their Duty to this House, and the Nation; and your Committee hope, that the Period they have pitched upon, will evince the Truth of this Intention, as it comprehends a general and most expensive War Abroad, a Demise of the Crown, the happy Ellablishment of the present Royal Family South Barry of the Speciety Commercial

Family upon the Throne, and an open and dangerous Rebel- An. 16. Geo. II. lion at Home; in short, every Event that can happen to justify extraordinary Expences in carrying on the Bufiness of Government. And it is not easy to express the Surprize of your Committee, when they found by the Account laid before them, which is annexed, (No. 11.) that from the if Day of August, 1707, to the 1st Day of August 1717, there was iffued under the aforesaid Heads, no more than the Sum

Your Committee, observing that the Sollicitors of the Treasury for the time being, are the only Persons to whom any of these Sums have been issued that are accountable for the same; and there having been issued to Mr. Paxton, the present Sollicitor 68,800 /. in the last ten Years, in which the Earl of Orford was first Commissioner of the Treasury, and the Sum of 58,516 l. 2 s. 10 d. to Mr Borret, and Mr Cratcherode + successively Sollicitors, between the 1/1 of August, 1707 and the first of August 1717. These Sums substracted from their respective Totals, the Remainder will be 1,384,600 l. 6 s. 3 d. issued for Secret Services, during the last ten Years, and 279.444 l. 1 s. 7 d. halfpenny, issued for the like Services from the Year 1707 to the Year 1717; by which it appears, that the Sum expended on these Services during the last Ten Years, amounts to near Five Times as much as what was expended for the fame Services in the Ten Years ending the first of August 1717; and your Committee cannot fee that any Exigency of Affairs, any Diminution of the National Debt, or Accession of Wealth to the Nation, has happened to justify such Profusion.

And though your Committee very well apprehend, that no Form of Government can subsist, without a Power of employing publick Money for Services, which are, in their Nature, fecret, and ought always to remain fo; yet when fuch exorbitant Sums are issued for those Services, as by pasfing through the Hands of a Minister, may become dangerous to the Liberties of the People, your Committee thought themselves indispensably obliged to lay it before you in all the Lights which the very imperfect Evidence they have been able to procure, can throw upon this nice and dangerous

Branch of Service.

Your Committee now proceed to lay before you the Proofs that the Money iffued under the Three Heads of Secret Service, of Special Service, and to Reimburfe Expences, were understood to mean one and the fame Thing.

mina- Service Money.

⁺ Member for Lestwithiel In the first Parliament of K. George 11,

An. 16. Geo. II. mination, 'That he look'd on all these Monies to be of the fame Nature; that they are all without Account except as to what relates to the Sollicitor of the Treasury, nor is there any Entry in the Trealury of the Application of any of these Sums of Money.'

And of

John Shepherd, a Deputy-Mcssenger of the Treasury, who John Shepherd. has received very large Sums under each of these Three Heads, being examined, faid, 'That the Warrants upon which he received Money at the Exchequer under any of these Three Heads, whether in his own Name, or in the Name of other Persons, were all without Account, and that he made no Distinction, whether the Orders were for Special, or Secret Service, or to Reimburfe Expences.'

> But your Committee observe, that all the Money issued under the Head of Secret Service, is issued in the Name of John Scrope, Elg; * Secretary of the Treasury, but the Orders for the Sums which were issued under the Heads of Special Service, or to Reimburfe Expences, are payable to Mr Lowether, Mr Richards, and Mr Shepherd, Messengers of the Exchequer, and to a great Variety of other Names, for which Sums no Receipts appear to have been given; but none of those to whose Names these Orders are payable, under either of these Three Heads, appear to have any Interest in the Sums thus issued.

Alfo of Mr

And your Committee have the greatest Reason to believe that many of the Orders for this Money were iffued unknown to the Persons to whom they were made payable; for Mr George Campbell, Banker, in the Strand, did, on his Geo. Campbell; Examination before the Committee declare, 'That he was defired by the Earl of Ilay to go to the Treasury, and take up an Order which he would there find iffued in his own Name, and to carry it to the Earl of Orford; that he accordingly went to the Treasury, where he received from one of the Clerks an Order for the Sum of 2231 1. 4 s. 6d. for Special Service; that he carried this Order to the Earl of Orford, and indors'd it; and then the faid Earl defired the Examinant to leave it for him at the Treasury; that he accordingly did leave it at the Treasury with Mr Lovue. one of the Clerks; that being at the Treasury about some other Affairs, in February last, he accidentally saw an Order that was made out in his Name for a Sum of Money, which he believes had been figned two or three Days before, but that he had no Notice from the Earl of Ilay, or any other Person, that such an Order would be made out in his Name.

And of Mr Farley.

And Mr Abraham Farley being examined in Relation to

an Order in his Name for 1200 l. faid, 'That about An. 16. Geo. If. the Month of January 1736, Mr Lawton told him that there was an Order made out in his Name, and bid him go and receive it; that he did receive it, but not for his own Use, for he paid it over immediately to Mr Laguton, and that he did not know what Laruton did with it, nor did he (Farley) know that any such Order was made out, till Me Laruton told him of it, and fent him to receive it.'

And Mr Edward Bryant, formerly Under Door-keeper to the Treasury, now Messenger, being examined before the Committee, in relation to two Orders, one for 3961 1. 6 s. 8 d. and the other for 2700 l. which were issued in his Name, faid, 'That Mr Tillon called him to indorfe those Orders, which he accordingly did, and then gave them to Mr Tilfon; and that this is all that he knew about it, for he never did receive the Money for those, or for any other Orders at the Exchequer, nor does he know who did.'

And your Committee also observe, that there have been a great Number of other Orders, which do not appear to have been communicated to the Persons whose Names were made Use of therein (if any such Persons there were) altho' their Names were indorfed on the Back of the respective Orders, as having received the Amount of the Sums therein specify'd; for a List of Persons in whose Names Money was issu'd during the Term of the Enquiry, lying before the Committee, many of these Names were read over, (a List of which is annex'd No. 12) to Mr Tilson, Mr Fane, and Mr Shepherd, and they all declar'd they knew no such Persons, tho' Mr Shepherd in particular had received Money on many of those Orders, and said he has wonder'd he never faw the Persons who endorsed for large Sums.' And tho' neither Mr Tillon, Mr Fane, nor Mr Shepherd knew who these Orders were indorsed by, yet Mr Fane said, 'That fuch Orders where the Persons were not known, have been fometimes taken away by the Earl of Orford, and other Lords of the Treasury, to be indorfed; and that they have often been fent away to be indors'd, and when they were thus fent away, it was generally to the Earl of Orford.

In the next Place your Committee lay before you, That though they have the greatest Reason to believe, that the whole Sum of 1,384,600 l. 6 s. 3 d. (excepting the annual Allowance to the Secretaries of State for Secret Service) was under the fole Direction and Disposition of the Earl of Orford; yet in order to proceed with the utmost Care and Caution, they think it becomes them to dillinguish to the House those Sums which they can trace into the Hands of particular Persons, from those which were evidently lodged

And of Mr Bryant.

An. 16. Geo. II. with the faid Earl, or with Mr Scrope, Secretary to the Treasury, and which your Committee have the strongest Reason to believe, from collateral Proofs, I having not been able to obtain the direct ones) were deliver'd over by Mr. Scrope to the said Earl.

And they begin with Mr Lowther, to whom the Sum of 177,610 l. 11 s. 6 d. has been issued within the Term of the Enquiry, which has been disposed of by him, from Time to Time, pursuant to Minutes of the Treasury, and he has paid in that Interval no less a Sum than 50,077 1. 18 s. to Authors and Printers of News-papers, such as Free-Briton, Daily-Courants, Persuasives to Candour and Impartiality, Corncutter's- Journal, Gazetteers, and other political Papers, as appears by the Appendix (No. 13.) And your Committee leave it to the Judgment of the House, whether this particular Sum was less under the Direction of the Earl of Orford than if it had pass'd through his own Hands.

The next Sum to be ranged under this Head is a Sum of Examination of 30,119 1. 4 s. which has been paid to Mr Middleton, Banker in the Strand, on the Earl of Ilay's Account, being 27,769 l. 4 s. issued in his own Name, and 2350 l. paid him by Shepherd. Mr Middleton being examin'd, said,

That all the Sums issued in his own Name, and what was paid him, by Shepherd, was received by him on the Earl of Ilay's Account, out of which about 1500 /. waspaid for Fees: That the Earl of Ilay has kept Cash with him for several Years; and that he keeps no Account of these Sums of Money distinct from his general Cash-Account with the Earl of Ilay, and that these Sums were drawn out of his Hands in the same Manner with the rest of the Earl of Ilay's private Money. That perhaps 5 or 6000 l. per Annum of the Earl of Ilay's Money may have pass'd thro' this Examinant's Hands; that this Examinant cannot charge his Memory that any large Sums were drawn out at any Time, except for Purchases and buying of India Bonds; nor has this Examinant remitted any Money into Scotland for Lord Ilay, nor does be remember that Lord Ilay has drawn on him from Scotland for more than one Sum, which was about 400 /. payable to a Merchant; nor did any Perions come to him for Money, according to the best of his Memory, but Servants and Tradelmer.

In the next Place, your Committee lay before you an Account of a Sum issued for his Majesty's Service, which tho' in itself not considerable enough to deserve the Attention of the House, yet is accompany'd with such Circumstances as make it their indispensable Duty to take particular Notice of it.

For

For Mr John Lever, High Bailiff of the City of West- An. 16. Geo. 11. minster, having incurr'd the Displeasure of this House, by acting at the general Election in an illegal and arbitrary Manner, in prejudice of the Rights and Liberty of the Electors of the faid City, and in manifest Violation of the Freedom Mr Shepherd reof Elections; and being in Custody of the Serjeant at Arms lating to 1500 l. attending this House for the said Offence, your Committee paid to the High find that 1500 /. issued under the Head of Money to reim-Bailist of Westburle Expences for his Majesty's Service, was (during his be-minster. ing in Cultody) apply'd to the use of the said Lever; for John Shepherd faid, That Mr Scrope fent for him and pull'd out of his Pocket an Order for 1500 l. which was in his (Shepherd's) Name, and told him he must carry it to Sir Charles Wager and endorse it, and leave it with Sir Charles; that he went accordingly to Sir Charles, took the Order of him again. pass'd it as usual, and receiv'd the Money, and deliver'd the 1500 L. Nett-money, into Sir Charles's own Hand. And Francis Gashry, Esq; a Member of this House being exa- Mr Gashry's Exmin'd, said, That Sir Charles Wager told him, that he was amination relatin Expectation of getting some Money for Mr Lever, the High-Bailiff of Westminster. And when he (Gashry) one Day return'd from the Navy-Board, Sir Charles told him, that in his Absence 1500 l. had been brought him by one of the Treasury, and Sir Charles desir'd him to take the Money and pay it to Mr Lever; and that he receiv'd the 1500 %. from Sir Charles the 2d of January last, and has fince paid it to the Use of the faid Lever, as will more fully appear by his Examination hereunto annexed (No. 14.)

Behdes these Sums there are two other Sums of 428 1. 12 s. and 2,110 l. 13 s. to be added to this Account, issued to Mr Le Heup, which he said were to answer Bills drawn from Examination of abroad. These Sums already mentioned, together with the Mr Le Heup. Money issued to the Secretaries of State for Secret Service, are all the Money which your Committee has been able to trace into the Hands of particular Persons, and amount in the whole to the Sum 271,769 l. os. 6 d. and this being taken from the Sum of 1,384,600 l. 6 s. 3 d. the whole issued under the three Heads for Secret Service, there remains the Sum of 1,112,831 l. 5 s. 9 d. which Sum your Committee conceive they have traced more immediately into the Hands of the Earl of Orford or Mr Scrope, and do now proceed to lay the Proofs thereof before you, as also the Circumstances which induced them to believe that whatever Sums were paid into the Hands of Mr Scrope, were by him paid over to the Earl of Orford.

They first observe that this lad Sum of 1,112,831 1 51. 9d. hath either been issued under the Head of Secret Service in the Name of Mr Scrope, or under the Heads of special Ser-

An. 16. Geo. II. vice, and to reimburfe Expences in the Names of Richards. Shepherd, and others, the greatest Part of which hath been received at the Exchequer by Shepherd or his Predecessor Richards.

Farther Examination of Mr Shepherd relating to Scoret Service Money.

For John Shepherd being examined faid, 'That he has received at the Exchequer several Sums of Money by Orders made out in his own Name, and other Sums by Orders made out in the Name of Persons unknown to him; and that he has generally received the Secret Service-Money which is in Mr Scrope's Name: That the Orders for these Sums were generally given to him by Mr Fane, or Mr Scrope, and fometimes by Mr Tilson, or an under Clerk, but chiefly by Mr Fane; and that he usually repaid the Money when he had received it, to those from whom he received the Order, unless they particularly directed him to pay it to other Persons; and that all his Warrants were without Account; and he made no Distinction whether the Orders were in his own Name or Mr Scrope's, or in unknown Names; nor whether for Special or Secret Service, or to reimburse Expences: That he has sometimes paid Money which he has thus received to the Earl of Orford; and this has sometimes been the Secret Service-Money which is in Mr Scrope's Name, amounting to 5. 6, 7, or 8,000 l. at a Time; and that he has paid him likewise Money that was issued in his (Shepherd's) Name, but that he has not made these Payments often; and that what he had been employed in had been formerly done By Mr Richards, but when Mr Richards died it was put on him (Shepherd.')

And of Mr Tilfon.

Mr Tillon being examined faid, That he has had Secret Service-Money brought to him, but that he never did receive any Money at the Exchequer himself, Shepherd always brought it to him; but that he has always delivered all Moneys he has received, whether for Sccret Service, Special Service, or to Reimburse Expences, to Mr Fane, Mr Scrope, or the Earl of Orford: That he has, to be fure, paid very confiderable Sums of Secret Service-Money to the Earl of Orford, but has no way of ascertaining by Book what he has paid, the Transition was so quick.

Alfo of Mr Fane.

Henry Fane Etg; a Clerk of the Treasury faid, . That he has received verbal Orders from the Earl of Orfardto prepare Warrants for the King to Sign, and to bring to him, the faid Earl, the Money. That Sums of Money for Secret Service have been frequently put into his Hands, which were fometimes brought him by a Messenger; and that he delivered this Money either to the Earl of Orford himself, or to Mr. Scrope, to carry it to the faid Earl. That when he give it to Mr Scrope it was for him-to carry to the Earl of Orford, and he believes all fuch Sums came An. 16. Geo. 11. into the faid Earl's Hands, excepting some trifling Sums of 40 or 50 L which he has paid to others. That he has paid many Sums to the faid Earl, but kept no Acccount; nor could he recollect the particular Sums he has thus paid, That what he has received and paid, and what he has acted in these Affairs was by the said Earl of Orford's Directions either from himself or fignified to him by Mr Scrope; and he does not know that any other Lord of the Treasury has ever given him Directions for either receiving or paying any Secret Service-Money.

And he farther faid, 'That the Orders he has received to prepare Warrants upon the three Heads of Secret Service. Special Service, or to reimburfe Expences for his Majelty's Service, have been either directly from Lord Orford himfelf, or from other Persons who signified to him that those Orders were from Lord Orford.

Your Committee next observe, that the Sum issued in Farther Re-Mr Scrope's Name for Secret Service, during the Time of marks of the the Enquiry, amounts to 815,819 1. 5 s. 2 d. And there Committee rehas been issued in the Name of Shepherd, within the same lating to Money Time, exclusive of what he paid to Mr Middleton, and Service. Sir Charles Wager, the Sum of 78,633 1. 14 s. 2 d. and in the Name of Richards, 45,546 l. 18 s. 6 d. and out of 32 Orders in various Names, which the Committee call'd for, 26 of them, amounting to the Sum of 119,211 1. 8 s. 4d. appear to have been received by Shepherd; for he faid he always figned them on the Back, as a Witness when they were not in his own Name. These Sums, thus issued in the Names of Mr Scrope, Shepherd, Richards, and of other Persons received by Shepherd, amount in the whole to 1,059,211 l. 6 s. 2 d. And this Sum your Committee think they have traced into the Hands of the Earl of Orford, or Mr Scrope, who, Mr Fane believes, carried all he received to the faid Earl. There is still wanting to make up the Sum of 1,112,831 1. 5 s. 9 d. the Sum of 53,619 1. 19 s. 7d. And this last Sum hath been iffued by Orders, fix of which. amounting to 23,650 l. were in Names not known, and witnessed by Persons belonging to the Treasury, tho' not by Shopberd; and the Remainder were generally for such small Sums, that your Committee did not think it necessary to enter into a more minute Examination about them.

It farther appears to your Committee, that besides the Sum of 1.453,400 d. 6 s. 3 d. already mentioned, there has been paid in the ten Years preceding the 10th of February last, the Sum of 45,675 I without Account to the Society of the Post-Office for the Time being, as by an Account hereunto annexed, (No. 15.) by virtue of a Warrane

An. 16. Geo. 11. from the Treasury; and this for a Service formerly inconfiderable. Your Committee find, by Papers laid before them, that the first Payment of this Kind was in the Year 1718. and amounted to 446 l. 2 s. o d. and the succeeding Payments for some Years were about 750 l. per Annum, from whence it has gradually increased to 4700 l. the present annual Allowance; and the present Secretary, John David Barbutt, Esq; being examined as to this Allowance, said, That the greatest Part of this Money is for defraying the Expence of a private Office for the inspecting foreign Correspondence; that he cannot say as to the first Establishment of this Office, having been but three Years and an half in the Post-Office; but he apprehends there was always an Office of this Kind, and that it was defrayed formerly by the Secretaries of the State. The Ellablishment in this Office feemed so extraordinary to your Committee, that they have added the Particulars, as contained in the Examination of Mr Barbutt, hereunto annexed, (No. 16.) Your Committee cannot but observe, that this Method of giving Warrants for Money, without Account, on the Offices, where any Part of the Civil-Lift Revenue is received, is highly irregular, as it tends to disguise the Sums issued for Secret Service, and may conceal the Amount of the Revenue itfelf; for if the Sums paid by fuch Warrants are deducted from the Receipt of the Revenue before it is accounted for. and the Balance only paid into the Exchequer, the Revenue must appear to be less by so much as the Deductions amount to.

Your Committee now proceed to lay before you the last Transactions of the Earl of Orford, as first Commissioner of the Trealury; by which it will appear that besides the vast Sums they have already mentioned, he not only exhausted the Remains of the Public Treasure, which his former Profufion had left in the Exchequer, but even presumed to anticipate the Revenues of his Majetty's Civil-Lift for a confiderable Sum, and by altering the regular Course of Exchequer-Payments, did avail himself of that Anticipation, and got a large Sum of Money into his own hands, disguised under three different Orders. For on the oth of February last, which was but two Days before he quitted his Employments, Orders were figured by him for the Payment of 23,641 1.7 s. 6 d. for Secret Service, and to reimburfe Expences, besides two other Orders payable out of the Civil-List Revenues, which he figned on the same Day, for 5047 1. 16 s. 3 d. 2, there being then other Orders in the faid Revenue, standing out and uncomplied with; for the Sum of 1562 l. 91. 8d. amounting in the whole to the Sum of 30,257 % 12 s. 11 d.f. notwithstanding, that on that Day there was but 14,284 1.

17 s. o d. & in the Exchequer, applicable to the Uses of his An. 16. Geo. 11. Majesty's Civil Government, as appeared to your Committee, by a State laid before them of the Cash of the Civil-List-Revenues, on that Day; and in order to shew the Irregularity which the faid Earl was guilty of in the Course of this Affair, it is necessary to lay before the House an Account of the regular Course of Payment at the Exchequer.

John Shepherd being examined, faid, that the Course of Account of the receiving Money in the Exchequer, is thus: The King issues regular Course of his Sign Manual for a certain Sum, which is counterfigned receiving Money by the Lords of the Treasury, and thereon the Lords of the in the Exche-Treasury direct a Warrant, figned by them to the Auditor of quer. the Exchequer, who on the Receipt of it makes out an Order, fignifying that Order is taken that Payment shall be made; this Order is fent to the Treasury, and signed by the Lords, and then one of the Secretaries of the Treafury figns a Letter to the Auditor, directing the Money to be issued when the before-mentioned Sign Manual, Warrant, and Order, are produced; that these Instruments, together with the Letter, are carried to the Auditor, who directs the Payment of the Order to one of the Tellers, and then fends it to the Clerk of the Pells, in order to its being recorded, but keeps the Sign Manual and the Warrant till the next Morning, when upon applying to him he delivers them up to the Person who is to receive the Money, who carries them to the Clerk of the Pells, where they are compared with the Order, and then the Clerk of the Pells writes them upon the Order, under the Auditor's Direction, Recorded such a Day; then the Order being carried to the Tellers, the Money is paid.

By this it appears that according to the regular Course of the Exchequer, there must be many Steps thro' the different Offices between the issuing of the Warrant and the Receipt of the Money from the Tellers, which were not observed in the case of the Sum, which the Earl of Orford did, on the 9th of February, get into his own Hands; for it appears, that this Sum was received in consequence of two Warrants, iffued in the Name of Mr Scrope, for Secret Services, one for 8442 1. and the other for 5969 1. and one other Warrant, iffued in the Name of Shepherd for Special Service, for 3000 l. and was paid to the Earl of Orford on the very Day the Warrants were figned by him the faid Earl. This was effected by depositing the Orders with the Bank-Officer at the Exchequer, before they were properly directed by the Auditor, for Mr Matthew Collet, the principal Bank-Clerk, who attends at the Exchequer, being examined, faid, that he paid the Money for those Orders to Mr Fane, Money.

Orford.

An. 16. Geo. II on Tuesday the 9th of February last, that the Orders were not directed by the Auditor, till the 11th of February following, and he did not receive the Sums for those Orders at the Ex-Mr Fane's Ac- and not receive the Sums for those Orders at the Excount of 174611 chequer, till the 17th; and Mr Fane being examined, said, paid by him to That he received on the 9th of February last the three Sums the E. of Orford of 8442 1. of 5969 1. and 3050 1. as Secret Service Money. as Secret Service- That it was from the Bank-Officer that he received this

Money, and left the Orders with him, and that the fame Day between the Hours of 11 and 1, he paid them altogether in one Payment to the Earl of Orford in his Closet at his House in Downing-Street; that he took his Directions from the faid Earl, to prepare the Warrants for these three Sums, and was at the same time ordered to bring the Money to him; and he being again farther examined, faid, that on the Thursday preceding the Earl of Orford's Resignation of his Employments, being the 4th of February, Mr Scrope ordered Mr Fane, to draw a Warrant for a Pension of 4000 l. per Aunum to the Lord Orford, during the joint Lives of the King, and of the Earl, which he accordingly did, and gave it to Mr Scrope, who returned it him the next Day, and said, the Earl of Orford had perused it, and approved of it with fome immaterial Alterations; and when it was wrote over fair, Mr Scrope took it again, and as Mr Fane believes, left it with the Earl of Orford.

It appears to your Committee, that one of the Orders, Examination of Major Forth regingn'd by the said Earl, on the 9th of February, was for lating to a Bill 2000 l. payable to Major Forth, under the Head of reimof 7000 l. drawn burfing Expences for his Majesty's Service.

by the D. of Boiton on the E. of

And Major Forth being examin'd, faid, That he advanc'd a Sum of Money to the Duke of Bolton, for which he was to receive 7000 l. at 1000 l. each half Year; and that the Duke drew a Bill, directed to Sir Robert Walpole, which run thus: 'I desire you will pay to Major Forth 1000 1. or ' his Order, every half Year, for three Years and a half, to 'commence from Lady-Day last, Value receiv'd, 16 May, "1738.' That Sir Robert Walpole verbally accepted this Bill, but would not indorse it: That he has receiv'd 5000 1. at five different Payments, from Sir Robert Walpole's own Hands in Bank Notes; and that Lord Orford told him, about the 9th of February last, that a Warrant was fign'd for the 2000 1. unpaid, which was the first Order that had pass'd through the Treasury.

Mr Tilson's Ac-. Your Committee being further desirous to inform themcount how Mofelves in what Manner the vast Sums issued for Secret Serney iffued for vice were accounted for to his Majesty, sent for Mr Tilson, Secret Service was accounted for who being examin'd, said, That when his Majesty sign'd a is Majesty. Sign Manual for the paying of any Sum of Money to Mir Scrope, for Secret Service, he also sign'd at the same time a Receipt to Mr Scrope for the same Sum, but that there was An. 16. Geo. II. always a Blank left for the Date, and the Dates are at the fame time put in at the Treasury to the Warrant, the Order, the Sign Manual, and the King's Receipt; and this is usually done by the Entering-Clerk, who wrote the Sign Manual, that it may all appear in the same Hand: That the Date of the Receipt is always made the same as the Date of the Order. And he produc'd to your Committee a Paper, the Copy whereof is here inferted, and is as follows:

GEORGE R.

We acknowledge to have received of our trufty and well beloved John Scrope, Esq; the Sum of 5969 l. being the same Sum which in pursuance of an Order, bearing Date this Day, was iffued to bim, at the Receipt of Our Exchequer for Our Secret Service. Given at our Court of St. James's, the 9th of February, 1741, in the 15th Year of Our Reign.

GEORGE R.

Examined. ORFORD.

And your Committee being inform'd, that the Paper deliver'd by Mr Tillon was the Hand-writing of Mr Thomas Wilkin, fent for him; and he being examin'd, faid, That the faid Paper was his Hand-writing, and was by him copied from a Paper deliver'd to him by Mr Tilfon, and he believ'd was an Original: That he has never feen the King write, Examination of was an Original: but he has feen many Sign Manuals, and he thinks there lating thereto. was the same Hand to that Paper: That he has never seen the Earl of Orford write, but what was to the Paper, he copied, was like what he had seen for the Earl of Orford's Hand: That he believes the Copy he made was not examin'd, but he copied it exactly, Word for Word, and took the Sums and Dates exactly, and he believes it was a true Copy.

Your Committee cannot but observe, that this Receipt is for one of those very Sums which Mr Fane receiv'd, by Anticipation, of the Bank-Officer, the 9th of February, and which was not really iffued at the Receipt of the Exchequer till the 17th of February, and never went into the Hands of Mr Scrope, but was immediately carried to Lord Orford.

Your Committee were at a Loss to know, what was meant by those Words, Examined, ORFORD, it being impossible to mean the witnessing to his Majelly's Receipt of it from Mr Scrope on that Day; for Mr Scrope never had the Mo-

An, 16 Geo, II. ney, therefore could not pay it into his Majesty's Hands, as that would imply. Nor have your Committee been able to inform themselves, whether or no this is conformable to any antient and regular Way of discharging Persons for the Receipt of such Sums, or a modern Invention.

And of Mr Screpe.

And in order to clear up this, and other Matters of far greater Importance, your Committee apply'd to the House for Leave to examine John Scrope, Esq; in consequence whereof he did attend on the 4th of June instant, when he did acquaint the Committee, That he had read the Oath and found it to be a strong one, and desir'd the Opinion of the Committee how he was to behave: That if they intended to examine him about the Secret Service Money, he doubted he could not answer without having his Majesty's Leave: And he faid he was tender of doing any thing that might leave a Stain upon his Character; though he believes he can give no Information to the Committee more than what they have already got. And then he withdrew. And then Mr Scrope was again call'd in, and the Chairman inform'd him, That the Committee had confider'd of what he had faid, and he was directed to account him, that they did not think themselves to be in a Situation to direct or advise in the Affair; but the Committee defir'd to know, whether he would submit to take the Oath or not? To which Mr Scrope answer'd, I hope you will give me Time to confider of it, as being a Matter of great Consequence; and then he withdrew: Upon which the Committee appointed him to attend on the 14th inflant June; on which Day he did accordingly attend, and your Committee being inform'd, that he defir'd to speak with the Chairman and the Committee, he was call'd in and ask'd. What he had to fay?

Whereupon Mr Scrope faid, He was extreamly forry that he should give the Committee so much Trouble, for he did affure them, that his Refusal was not premeditated, for he came the other Day resolved to take the Oath, tho' he had then Doubts if he should answer in what related to Secret Service Money, and he thought he might have made his Objections, when he was examin'd to it; and accordingly began to take the Oath; but when he came to the general Words, he found them to be so strong, and general, that he doubted if he should not be guilty of Perjury, if he should take the Oath and not answer.

That he had improved the Time the Committee had been so kind to give him, and had consulted with the ablest Lawyers and Divines, and they have made his Scruples flronger; and that he did not do it to obstruct the Enquiry, but could not as an honest Man, and with a safe Conscience, take the Oath; that he had laid his Case before the King, and was authorized to fay, 'That the Disposal of Money An. 16. Geo. II.

- P. J. DE

'isla'd for Secret Service, by the Nature of it, requires the " utmost Secrecy, and is accounted for to His Majesty only, Who refuses to and therefore His Majesty cou'd not permit him to disclose take the Oath, any Thing on that Subject,' and to answer That he had well confidered with himself, and consulted certain Questions other Persons, and thinks he should be criminal if he took that Occasion. a general Oath, when there were particular Questions which he did not intend to answer; that he hoped he should not incur the Displeasure of the Committee, for if the Oath was confined, he was ready to be examined.

Which Behaviour of Mr Scrope greatly furpriz'd your Remarks of the Committee, confidering the Information they had received Committee from the many Papers relating to the Secret Service, which thereupon. had been laid before them, and from the Examination of the Messengers, and the most knowing and active Clerks in the Office where he is Secretary.

Mr Scrope having thus refused to answer to this material Part of this Enquiry, your Committee beg Leave to observe, that those Sums which are specify'd to be for Secret Service, and which have always been iffu'd in Mr Scrope's Name, are the only Money for which His Majesty gives a Receipt, and may therefore be all that the Crown conceives to be issu'd without Account; for the specious Titles of Special Service, and to reimburfe Expences, feem, from the very Phrase, to imply some Account; and what is iffu'd to the Sollicitor of the Treasury, under the Head of reimburfing Expences, is actually accounted for, so that His Majesty may possibly be led to believe, that all the Money issu'd under these Heads is accounted for, as he gives no Receipt for the same; and thus it may happen, that by the Artifice of a Minister, such Sums of Money may be issu'd under the Heads of Special Service and to reimburse Expences, as may endanger the publick Liberty, while the Crown may be ignorant of the fame, and by attending only to what is specify'd to be for Secret Service, may believe that Service is kept within reasonable Bounds.

These are the most remarkable Particulars that your Committee think proper to lay before you, relating to the Head of Secret Service, which, if it be confidered either by Comparison, or by its Consequence, either by the Sum, or the Manner of its Issue and Receipt, are equally exorbitant,

If it be considered by the gross Comparison, then it stands as above; as 1,384,600 l. 6 s. 3 d, to 279,444 l. 1 s. 7 d. Halfpenny; if by descending into Particulars, then it will appear, the two remarkable Years 1733 and 1734, amount the of the last to contract the property

An. 16. Geo. II. to 312,128 l. 19 s. 7 d. being confiderably more than the 1742. Total of the whole Ten Years, from 1707 to 1717.

And what is most astonishing, the Demands for Secret Services, in the six Weeks immediately preceeding the Resignation of the Earl of Orford, amount to more than the whole Expence, upon that Head, in the Three Years ending August 1710, and the Draughts upon the Exchequer for that Use, in one Day only, being the 9th Day of February last (the last indeed he sat at the Treasury) amount to a greater Sum than was issued for that Service, in any one of the aforemention'd Three Years, so gloriously distinguished by repeated Victories.

And if the Consequences of this Profusion be considered. what can they be but the Alteration of a Government, which so lately was supported in that Branch for one fifth Part of the Expence upon the medium of the Ten Years. Your Committee have informed you how the Power, the Influence, the Offices of the Government have been imployed by him towards violating the Freedom of your Elections; and they apprehend they have just Grounds to suspect that Part of these immense Sums have been expended for the same most pernicious Purposes; and the rather when they confider from what Question the obstinate Silence of Paxton took its Rife, as also what Sums have been given towards the defraying the Expences of the new Charter at Radnor, and to carry on the Prosecutions at Colchester, as also the strong Probability of the same Practice being carried on with Respect to the Borough of Orford; besides the remarkable Sum to Lever, as a Reward to a most unjust returning Officer, censur'd by, and actually under the Punishment of Parliament, as a Violator of the Liberties of his Country.

Nor are the Apprehensions of your Committee at all lessened when they consider the Manner of issuing and receiving these great Sums; For here they find the regular Course and Order of the Exchequer was, on the 9th of February last, overturned by pawning the Orders to a Bank-Man for immediate Payment, by which Means the Earl of Orford got 17,461 l. into his own Hands, one of the last Days he remained in the Treasury, which was disguised in three Warrants, and was much more than there actually was in the Exchequer applicable to the Uses of the Civil Government.

They also find the Sums issued under the two Heads of Special Services, and to reimburse Expences for his Majesty's Service, tho' they seem to imply open and determinate Uses, yet they are issued without Receipt from his Majesty as well as without Account, except what relates to the Solicitors of the Treasury; so that it is possible the Sums under these two Heads, Heads, amounting to 508,781 /. 1 s. 1 d. may be issued An. 16. Geo. II. and imployed for Uses, which the Crown itself may look upon as no ways making Part of the Article of Secret Service; and if a profule and deligning Minister should by these Means get a Power of squandering such vast Sums of Secret Service Money upon his own arbitrary Defigns, while the Crown may be milled to imagine that this Branch of the Government is carried on at a moderate and justifiable Expence, your Committee apprehend that the King may be impoverish'd, the Civil List exhausted, the just Debts unpaid, and the People in Consequence loaded with new Burthens to replace that Profusion which may be so dangerous to their Liberties.

Your Committee have now laid before you the Conduct . of the Earl of Orford, with relation to the Payment of the Troops, the Freedom of your Elections, and the Quantity as well as Manner and Confequence of issuing and receiving the Publick Money, supposed to be imployed for Secret Services of the State, notwithstanding the Obstructions they have met with either for want of Power to compel or indemnify the unwilling Witness or Accomplice, and from their Inability to protect and support those who might have been more ready to do their Duty to the Publick.

Your Committee are now proceeding in the Examination of the Copies of the Papers and Letters, and Extracts of Letters relating to the Convention, referred to them by the House, which they will report with all possible Dispatch.

Numb. II.

APT. Alexander Wilson being examined in the most Capt. Wilfon's folemn Manner, this 21st Day of April, 1742, faid, Examination re- That he was an Agent to Lord Catheart when he was prethod of paying paring for his Expedition to the West Indies. That in or the Troops sent about May or June, 1740, Lord Catheart received from to the West In- Mr Pelham (b) a rough Draught of Instructions, which Mr Pelham proposed to give to his Deputy Pay-Master, that was to attend the Troops under Lord Catheart. That this Examinant perused the said Draught together with Lord That it contained Directions to the Deputy to pay the Troops at Jamaica, at such a Rate of Exchange, as should appear to Lord Catheart and the superior Officers, to be most advantageous to them. That this Rate of Exchange should be constant and invariable; and that the said Deputy should keep an Account current of what he thus paid; and if any Advantage accrued from the Currency thus fettled, the Publick were to be entitled to it; but if there was any Loss, the Publick were to make it good: And it was also proposed, that the Deputy should carry with him a Sum of Money for this Purpose, and should be authorized to draw the necessary Bills on the Paymaster-General. That Lord Catheart approved of these Instructions; but onor about the latter End of June, or the Beginning of July, 1740, it was intimated to the Lord Catheart from the Pay-Office, or by Mefficurs Burrell (c) and Briftow (d), that the Trea-

Tressury were of Opinion, that the Troops were not to be An. 16. Geo. II. left to the Uncertainty of finding Money Abroad, fince Merchants might make their Advantages of the Necessities the Troops might fometimes be under, and that in Confequence of this Opinion, a Contract for paying the Troops at the Rate of 120 l. Jamaica Money, for 100 l. Sterl. was then depending before the Treasury. That Lord Catheart immediately on this Information, applied, by this Examinant, to Mr Williams (e) and Mr Monfon's (f) Offices for a Meeting. His declared Purpole in procuring this Meeting, was, if possible, to get the Troops paid in a more advantageous Manner, for he did not apprehend that the Contract was already pass'd, but only that it was then depending. That at this Meeting, which was at Mr Williams's Office, between the 4th and 13th of July, 1740, there were present Lord Cathcart, Mr Hanbury Williams, Paymaster of the Marines, Mr Burrell, Mr Bristow, and this Examinant; Mr Pelbam was then in Yorksbire with Mr Arundel, as he believes. Lord Catheart took Notice of the Inconveniences which might arise by paying Men only 120 l. Jamaica Money for 100 l. Sterl. when, by the concurring Reports from Jamaica, and of Merchants, the Exchange was at 135 to 140. That he hereupon mentioned what he had observed in Armies Abroad, particularly what happened at Ghent and Bruges in 1712, where the Troops mutiny'd on Account of some small Deductions for Camp Necessaries and Bread, which were taken from some Regiments and not from others. That this Examinant faid at the same Time, that as the Troops from North America, under Colonel Blakeney, were paid at the full Currency of the Exchange in those Parts, he apprehended, that if they received less Money, when they join'd Lord Cathcart, than what they had before, they might begin a Mutiny, and by informing Lord Catheart's Men, might occasion Difcontents and Mutiny amongst them also. The Contractors answered to this, that the Difference of Currency in the North Provinces of America, from whence Colonel Blakeney's Troops came, was rather more to the Advantage of those Troops than the intended Payment of 120 l. per Cent. That the Contractors explained themselves on this Particular, in a Manner that this Examinant could not answer, nor indeed understand. That Lord Catheart was filent. The Contractors reckoned up several Articles of the Charge it would be to them, some of which were the Insurance of the Money, the Freight, the Commission which they were to pay their Correspondents in Jamaica, with other incident Charges which

An. 16. Geo. II. which this Examinant cannot remember. All these together, they faid, was the Cause why they could not contract for less Profit, than what they should get by paying 120 l. Jamaica Currency, for 100 l. Sterl. There was some other Talk upon this Affair, which all ended in Messieurs Burrell and Bristono (but thinks it was Mr Burrell) declaring, that they had made an Agreement with the Treasury already upon these Terms, and that they could not do it for less Profit. That this Declaration of Mr Burrell's put an End to the Debates, and the Meeting, for Lord Catheart acquiefced in what the Treasury thought fit, as he was under Orders. He was a polite Man, and did not choose to fignify his Disapprobation when it was of no Consequence: So, on the faid Declaration, he faid he was to be determined by fuperior Powers; but in private Conversation afterwards with this Examinant, he wished it had been better. That this Examinant cannot, of his own Knowledge, fay what Steps had been taken with the Treasury with Relation to the first intended Instructions, nor does he know of any publick Notice given by the Treasury for receiving Proposals, nor has he heard of any Proposals from others but Messieurs Burrell and Briftow: But he is not in the Way of Treasu-

Ty Affairs.

Being further examined on the 27th Day of April 1742, in Relation to the rough Draught of the Inftructions mentioned above, faid, That Mr Pelbam, in Conversation with Lord Catheart, when this Examinant was present, delivered it as his Opinion, that the Troops might be supplied in the Manner there laid down, especially as he supposed that Money would be brought into Jamaica by taking of Prizes. That the rough Draught was delivered to Lord Catheart after these Conversations. That it began with the Style of Instructions, in the same Manner as was customary to give to all Deputy Pay-matters Abroad, impowering him to take up, and draw Bills for the Supply of the Troops, &c. That it was written in a running Fland, and, as he thinks, in two Sheets of Paper, Folio-way, but all the Sides were not filled. That as it was to be perused by Lord Catheart as a Plan, on which, if approved of, Instructions were to be formed, there was Room left for Additions and Alterations; but that Lord Carbcart finding, that fo far as it related to himfelf, it was complete, and wanted none, neither Lord Catheart nor this Examinant made any therein, but returned it to the Pay-Office unaltered. That this Examinant believes Lord Catheart's Secretary carried it back, or perhaps Mr Pelham's Deputy might call for it. That this Examinant faw the final Instructions given to the Deputy Pay-master, but he only looked over it transfently; however An. 16. Geo. II. he read so much as to be sure, that the Power of drawing upon the Pay-master in Case of Necessity or Disappointment, was therein contained, tho' he cannot expressly speak to those Words. This Examinant adds, That he has been informed by one of the Clerks of Mr Williams's Office, that Messieurs Burrell and Bristow did ensure the Money they sent to Jamaica, but he does not know at what Rate.

ALEXANDER WILSON.

NUMB. III.

DEter Burrell, Esq; * being examined in the most solemn Examination of Manner, this 30th Day of April, 1742, faid, That Mr Burrell reabout the latter End of the Year 1739, going down Stairs tract for the Payfrom the House of Commons, he was asked by Sir Robert ment of those Walpole, if he, this Examinant, or his Acquaintance, had Troops. any Money in the Northern Colonies. That about Three Weeks or a Month afterwards, he told Sir Robert that he could not meet with any Persons, whom he could depend on, who had. And Sir Robert then replied, he believed there would be no Occasion for any. That as soon as it was publickly known that Troops were going to Jamaica, this Examinant took Occasion from this Incident to apply to Sir Robert Walpole, and to acquaint him, that as he, this Examinant, had Correspondents in Jamaica on the South-Sea Company's Account, who were Men of Credit at Jamaica, and who had the greatest Command of Money of any in the Place, this Examinant thought he could supply the Government as well as any Body, if Money was wanted there: To which the Examinant then received no positive Answer. That after this, this Examinant confidering with himfelf the great Importance of this Affair, he thought it too much Hazard for himself alone, and thereupon asked Mr Briffow, if he thought it could be undertaken without a great Risque. That when they had consulted together, they agreed on the Forms on which they would propose it, and about the Month of June, the Parliament being then prorogued, they waited on Sir Robert Walpole at Chelsea, and made an Offer of furnishing any such Sums as might be wanting for the Payment of the Troops, on the same Conditions, which were afterwards agreed to by the Treasury. That Sir Robert Walpole asked them, if those were the lowest Terms, and hoped they would not ask more than what was reasonable, nor what any Body should complain of. And the Exami-1765.

An. 16. Geo. II. nant affured him, that, upon the best Calculation, they had not. That he would not take it upon himself, but defired them to make their Proposals to the Treasury. That a few Days after this Conversation with Sir Robert Walpole, they did lay this Proposal before the Treasury, without any Thing else passing between them and Sir Robert Walpole in the Interval; nor had the Examinant any Conversation with any other Lord of the Treasury before he offered his Propofal to the Board. That on Delivery of these Proposals, he does not recollect whether he was called in or no, nor can he fay when he received the first Notice of his Proposal being accepted, nor by whom he was informed of it; but he thinks, if any Thing particular had happened on this Occasion, he muit have remembered it; nor does he recollect of meeting Mr Hanbury Williams the Morning this Proposal was delivered. This Examinant does indeed remember that he one Morning met Lord Catheart, or Capt, Willer, who defired a Meeting at Mr Hanbury Williams's Office, but he is not fure that this was the Day of his Contract's being agreed to, but rather believes it was a Week or a Fortnight after. That the same Day this Meeting was desired, Mr Bristow and this Examinant met Lord Catheart and Capt, Wilson, and Mr Hanbury Williams, who came after. That this Examinant does not conceive, that Lord Catheart would defire a Meeting, or could have any Thing to do with this Examinant and his Partner, but as Contractors; and therefore he thinks this Mecting was after the Contract was passed; and that he supposes the Intention of this Meeting was, that Lord Catheart might be satisfied, that the Troops would not be disappointed, but that due Care would be taken to supply them with Money when Abroad. That at this Meeting Lord Catheart talked to Capt. Wilfen of the Manner in which the Troops were to be paid; faying to them, that if the Troops going to Jamaica were not paid at the same Rate of Exchange as those from North America, it might occasion Discontents, as he remembered a Mutiny had like to have happened in Flanders, on the like Account. That they faid they had nothing to do with the paying of the Troops, what they had contracted for, was to deliver the Money at such a certain Rate. That this Examinant takes it for granted, that Lord Catheart by his Enquiry, wanted to know in what Specie the Troops should be paid, and not at what Rate the Money was to be furnished to the Deputy Pay-master, That this Examinant does not remember there were any Disputes at this Meeting, whether the Contract was a good or a bad Contract, or indeed whether there was Mention made about it; and he believes at the Beginning of the Conversation Lord Catheaut knew of the Contract being pasted; passed; and he is persuaded that Capt. Willow knew it, be- An. 16. Geor 11. cause the Gentleman who is gone over Deputy Pay-master, was informed by the Examinant with every Step taken in this Affair, and he was intimate with Capt. Wilson. That this Examinant does not remember to have told Capt. Wilfon that the Contract was passed, but if he had met him, he believes he should have told him, but he takes it for granted, that it was understood to be done in their whole Conversation at that Meeting; and he does not remember that either Lord Cathcare or Capt. Wiljon thewed any Surprise at that Time, on hearing it was done; and that he thinks that this Meeting with him and Mr Briftow, was on the Footing of their being Contractors for the Money. That Lord Catheart asked them how they would supply the Money; and they told him they would fend Foreign Gold; but this Examinant cannot remember if there was any Talk about Infurance, Freight, or other Items. That in this Conversation, which he does not know latted half an Hour, many Things of another Nature were talked of between Lord Catheart and Capt. Wilfon, as about the Embarkation of the Troops, &c. That the' this Examinant had contracted at 120 1, he does not recollect, that the Rate was mentioned at this Meeting. The Reafon for fixing the Price at 120, was upon the Confideration of the probable Fall of the Exchange at Jamaica, when fo great a Demand must be made, upon the Payment of so large a Body of Troops. That as the Exchange had advanced fince the last War from 111 to 135, during which Time, there not having been any extraordinary Demand for Money in that Island, the Reverse might reasonably be expected when a Demand of Money was made, that greatly exceeded the natural Currency. This plainly appeared upon Col. Blakeney's Arrival with but 3000 Men, who, with great Difficulties, raised between 9 and 10,000 1. at 120, and could not have procured more at above 110, at least that was the Demand from those who had Money by them. In regard to the Par of Exchange between Jamaica and London, I am not informed by what Rule that Calculation is made, unless it be from the Value they have flamp'd on the Silver Specie of this Kingdom, a Shilling passing there current for Fisteen Pence, which answers to the Exchange of 125 1. for 100 1.

From the Uncertainty of obtaining Money at Jamaica, I defired Mr Colebrooke to enquire at what Rate he could procure Bills on that Place; and he informed me, he could not get Bills at any fixt Rate, not even at 120 L nor any other Price, than what should appear the current Exchange of the Island, as the same should happen to be, at the Time their Bills should appear there. We had then no other Refort, box

An. 16, Geo. II. but to fend out some Specie to supply the Want of Currency in Temaica, and in that there was no Certainty as to its Value, as whatfoever was the nominal Price there appeared no Act of Council to oblige any one to receive it; and the Valuation is so out of Judgment that no Man could conceive it to be made but by Chance, as a Moida of 27 s. is above 3 per Cent. higher than a Moida of 36s. in proportion to the intrinsick Value of each; which determined us to buy heavy! Partugal Money of the Bank, not only to prevent any Complaint, if received by Tale, but to answer their full Value, if received by Weight. The first Parcel sent being heavy Money of 36 s. each, which if had been obliged to fell at Jamaica by the Ounce, would have rendered Loss instead of Profit to the Contractors. The Infurance of this Money was at 2 \frac{1}{2} per Cent. which went by the Men of War with the Troops, but we apprehend we had the Rifque of a Deviation, if the Ships had been ordered to Carthagena, or any other Port but to Jamaica, which would have thrown the Rifque on us; but if from any Accident the Ship where our Money was had not arrived with the Troops, we had then been at the Mercy of the Inhabitants, and in fuch a Cafe, I would willingly have compounded for 10 per Cent. Lois. We agreed for one per Cent. Freight, for all but what we fent with the Troops, but we are informed one of the Captains has fued our Agents for a Freight of 2 1/2 per Cent. The Charge of Shipping is put at one per Cent. for the Expence of Guards, Iron Chests, Servants, and Coaches to attend it. and for the Risque and Charges of sending the Money in a Boat from Portsmouth to St. Helens.

That in regard to the nominal Value of the Gold Species at Jamaica, at a Medium, deducting the Commission and Charges, we allow there doth not remain a Profit of g per Cent. upon the present Contract. That no other Persons but Messieurs Burrel and Bristow were consulted or concerned in the Contract, when they first engaged in it; that after the first Imbarkation, and this Examinant believes after the fecond, but before the Contract was raised to 125 l. Sir Robert Walpole spoke one Day to this Examinant and told him, that Mr Hanbury Williams had defired him to ask the Contractors, that a Friend of his, a West India Merchant, might have a Share in the Remittances. But he added, ' You are to do just as you please: I don't ask you to let any Body ' in; for the Contract is your's.' That some little Time afterwards Mr Hanbury Williams spoke to this Examinant and Mr Bristow, telling them, that he had a Relation, one Mr Hanbury a West India Merchant, to whom he had Obligations, and as he had Money and Effects at Jamaica, he defired he might be concerned, for the Future, one fourth

Part with them: And fince that Time he has been accord- An. 16. Geo. II. ingly concerned one fourth Part in what relates to the Payment of the Troops in Mr Hanbury Williams's Office. That Mr Hanbury had wrote, as he told the Examinant, to his Correspondents at Jamaica, that in Case any Money was wanting, he might pay it into the Hands of their Agents, and receive their Bills for the same ; but the Examinant said. that though Mr Hanbury wrote, no Use has been made of it. That before this Sir Robert Walpole never recommended any Person to be concerned with the Contractors, nor had any Knowledge of any one that was; but that some Time after the Contract was passed, he (the Examinant) asked Mr Monfon, Deputy Pay-maiter to Mr Pelbam, whether he would take one fourth Part of it; telling him, that though the Profits might not be great, yet unless some unforeseen Accident happened the Lois could not be much. That Mr Monfon accepted of it, and has one fourth Part of the Contract, as far as it relates to the Payment of the Troops in the Office where he is Deputy. And being asked if Mr Monfon had any Effects at Jamaica, he said he could not tell; nor had he any there himself, nor has he (Mr Monjon) advanced any Money, nor has had any Share or Trouble of the Management, but is to fland his Share in the Profit or Lofs; and befides these, no Person else is concerned with them, to the Knowledge of this Examinant; that this Examinant did offer half his own Share to his Brother, and a Gentleman engaged in Bufinels with him; but they thought it too great a Rifque for them to run. He likewise mentioned it to another Gentleman, who would not accept of it. That these Refusals were very early, before any Thing was done in it, more than passing the Contract; and that he mentions them to thew that he thought he had no great Bargain of it. A Copy of a Minute of the Treasury lying before the Committee. dated the 29th of January 1740-1. relating to the Refusal of the Agents of the Contractors at Jamaica to supply the Troops under Col. Gooch and Blakener with a Sam of Money, being read to the Examinant, and it being therein faid that Mr Burrell agree, that those Troops were always understood and intended as contained and included in his and Mr Bri-Row's Proposal to the Treasury; this Examinant said, that Minute had miltaken their Meaning; for their Agreement was for the Troops under Lord Catheart, and those he should find at Jamaica; and that this Examinant never understood, that the Troops under Col. Goodb and Col. Blakeney would be included in the Contract before the Arrival of Lord Cathcart at Jamaica. That this fixammant believes, that it was about June or July 1741, that he had the first Account from Jamaica of the Refulal of his Agent's to comply with the Demands

An. 16 Geo. II. Demands of the Deputy Pay-master. That the Contractors having Advice from Jamaica, that there was no Money in the Island, and that it was proposed, that Notes of Hand should have a Currency, they had applied to the Treasury for the Advance of a second Sum; and that in December following there being a fecond Imbarkation, they procured a third Sum from the Treasury on Account of the Convenience they had of fending it.

> And being further examined, this 17th Day of June, he faid, That Mr Colebrooke, the Deputy Pay-master, who went with Lord Catheart, supplied the Place of an Agent for the Examinant and the other Contractor; and that Mr Colebrooke had a Commission of one per Cent. only. And, he added, that there never had been any Money advanced to the Contractors, without their delivering a Memorial to the Treasury. June 23. P. Burrell.

Examination of Mr Briftow, relating to the faid Contract.

John Brillow. Efg; + being examined in the most folemn Manner, this 30th Day of April, 1742, said, That the first Notice he had, relating to the Remittances, was from Mr Burrell, who told him, that probably there would be a Contract for supplying the Troops under Lord Catheart with Money; and he thinks Mr Burrell mentioned his having talk'd with Sir Robert Walpole about it, but he cannot be positive. That Mr Burrell asked him, (this Examinant) if he would be concerned. To which he agreed; and then, between them, formed a Proposal to be said before the Lords of the Treasury. That previous to their laying of it before the Treasury, they waited on Sir Robert Walpole, who was then at Chelfea, the Sessions, as this Examinant believes, being ended. That in this Proposal, he thinks, they mentioned 120 per Cent. as the Rate at which, they would agree to fuenish the Money. Sir Robert said, that he expected they should offer it at a reasonable Profit, that the Publick may be well ferved. That this Examinant cannot recollect any other Conversation that passed, either with Sir Robert Walpole, or any Body else, before their Proposal was communicated to the Treasury, nor does he believe that they spoke about it to any other Lord of the Treasury. That when it was laid before the Treasury, he does not remember whether they went with the Proposals themselves, but is inclined to believe they did, and that they delivered it to some Person in Office, who carried it in. That he cannot remember, whether there were any Debates about it, nor whether he was called in or no; but from a Copy of a Minute of Treasury lying upon the Table before the Committee, he thinks the Proposals were immediately accepted ; and he is pretty fure he had Notice of it when it was accepted, though he cannot fay by whom, An. 16. Geo. II. nor can he be fure that at that Time he acquainted Mr Hanbury Williams he had agreed. That he remembers the Meeting of Lord Catheart, Mr H. Williams, and Capt. Wilfon, at Mr H. Williams's Office, where Mr Burrell was likewise present; but he is pretty sure no Body from Mr Pelham's Office was there, and believes it was in July 1740, and believes it was after the Contract was passed, tho' he cannot say if it was that Day; nor can he remember who first proposed this Meeting, tho' he believes Lord Catheart; nor where or when the Agreement to meet was made. That the Subitance of the Conversation, at this Meeting, was the Manner in which the Troops were to be paid. That Lord Catheart talked about the Pay of the Troops, but this Examinant cannot tell if Lord Catheart supposed the Contract to be passed. or to be only a Proposal, though he apprehends that the Contract was then made, and that Lord Catheart knew it was made, because otherwise they, as Contractors, could have nothing to do with Lord Catheart. That this Examinant believes it might be possible Lord Catheart might except to the paying of the Troops at a low Rate. That this Examinant and his Partner said in Substance, that the Rate the Troops were to be paid at was no Concern of theirs. That their Business was only to supply the Money at a certain Rate; but this Examinant does not apprehend, that the Troops were to be paid at a lower Rate than what they had contracted for. That this Examinant thinks Lord Catheart defired to know in what Specie they intended to fend out their Money. That they told him in Portugal Gold. That the Contractors proposed the Rate of 120 I. Jamaica Money, for 100 /. Sterling, for the following Reasons; that they were to furnish Money in a Place where there was not much; that therefore in case a considerable Sum was demand. ed at once, the Owners of the Money would make the most Use of it they could, and lower the Exchange under the Rate of 120 /. at which they had contracted; for that Colonel Blakeney, before Lord Catheart's Arrival, drew on the Pay-Office for a small Sum, and this with Difficulty, as he has heard, at or under 120; and had he wanted a larger Sum, he must have doubtless drawn even still lower. That this put them under a Necessity of sending out Funds or Money to supply the Want of Currency in that Place. That as Men of Business, it was natural for them to consider the several Species of Money, which might be proper to fend this ther. That in this they found a great Variety. That they could not had there was any Law to fettle the Currency of different Species of Coin, and the different Species of Coin were actually at different Proportions of Value in their Cur-

of these thents of the blackers of

An. 16.Geo. II. rency; the Guinea in particular being at a lower Rate than the Thirty Six Shilling Pieces, and both these lower than the Twenty-feven Shilling Pieces. That this Examinant is not fure, that any confiderable Sum of Moidores or Thirty-fix Shilling Pieces were there before; and they were apprehenfive, that the Sum sent out by the Contractors, which was the greatest Part in Thirty fix Shilling Pieces, and the rest in Moidores, might on its Arrival at Jamaica, be reduced to an Equality with Guineas; and in order to prevent in fome Measure the Loss, which must attend an Alteration in the Value of these several Species, which was not improbable, when the Disproportion should come to be considered in the Island of Jamaica, the Contractors sent the major Part of the Supply by the Fleet under Sir Chaloner Ogle, in weighty Portugal Gold of Thirty-fix Shilling Pieces, that at all Events they might be the Value in Gold. That the Contractors fent their Money on board three Men of War, and infured it; but notwistanding this, they were liable to many Risques and Accidents; for had the Men of War been ordered to any other Place, this would have been a Deviation from the Voyage, and would have vacated the Infurance; and that the very Want of Money at Jamaica, or even what was on board one Ship only, though it had not been loft, would have funk the Exchange; and that this was no improbable Accident, for three or four of the capital Men of War were actually separated from the Fleet and driven to Lisbon; and had the Money been on board either of these Ships, the Contractors would have been under great Disadvantages, as they must have rais'd it at Jamaica, at a great Loss; and as it was, all the Money fent out had, upon the Arrival of the Fleet, no more Effect than to raise the Exchange to 130, and fmall Sums foon after got up to 135 and 140. Soon after which the Contractors came to a new Agreement at 125. That they have been told lately that the Victualling and Navy have drawn at 135 and 140; but this being for Stores, and Provision is not like Money, but is really no Exchange at all. And this Examinant did not inform himself of the Rates at which the Navy and Victualling drew, when he was deliberating about his own Contract. He added, that he has fince been told, that the Independent Companies at Jamaica are paid at 125. That he believes, that he might communicate a Memorial, containing the Reasons for fixing the Currency at 120, to Lord Orford, before this Examinant's Memorial of the 5th of Febuary last was laid before the Treasury. That soon after Lord Catheart's Arrival, Mesirs. Merequether and Manning, their Correspondents, from a Misunderstanding, did refuse to furnish Money for the Troops, but the Deputy Paymatter, Mr Coubrooke, drew on

Mr Pelham. That this Examinant believes, that the Rea. An. 16. Geo. II. fon of the Refusal of their Agents, was their thinking they could make a greater Advantage of their Money from the Necessity of the Public, than what they could get by complying with our Commission. The Reason urged by them, was the indefinite Demand of Mr Colebrooke, who refused to specify either the Sums, or the Times when they would be wanted. That as the Contractors were to pay the Difference of these Bills drawn on Mr Colebrooke, if they had been under 120 or 125 per Cent. they thought they had a Right to those Bills, when drawn at a higher Rate, and they accordingly took them up and paid them as foon as due, with Money they received from the Pay-Office; but these Bills are still in Dispute, and our Contract does not subfist any longer : for the Lords of the Treasury have within this Day or two given Order to the Deputy at Jamaica to draw on the Paymaster: That no Persons were concerned with them in their Contract 'till after it was made; but that now Mr Monson. Deputy Paymaster to Mr Pelham, and Mr Hanbury, a Merchant, are Sharers. Mr Monfon has One fourth Part of what is paid in the Office where he is Deputy; Mr Hanbury has from a certain Time been intitled to One fourth Part of what relates to the Marines, which are paid in Mr H. Williams's Office. That the Offer to Mr Monson was made jointly by the Contractors, on their own Motion, and without the Defire or Knowledge, as he believes, of any other Perfon whatsoever, and before any Remittances were made; and he never offered a Share to any Person but Mr Monson. That as to Mr Hanbury, Sir Robert Walpole mentioned to them, that Mr H. Williams defired his Relation, Mr Hanbury, should have a Part. That Sir Robert had been spoke to by Mr Williams about it; but he (Sir Robert) told the Contractors, he left it to themselves; and it is most probable Sir Robert Walpole mentioned this to the Contractors before Mr H. Williams spoke to them. That neither Mr Monfon nor Mr Hanbury have advanced any Money on this Affair, nor indeed have the Contractors themselves properly advanced any Money; for on delivering their Bills drawn at Sight on Jamaica to the Paymaster here, he furnished the Money for them, as is the constant Practice of the Pay-Office, whenever Bills of Exchange are furnish'd payable in foreign Parts by the Drawers of such Bills, or by Draughts from Jamaica on the Pay Office, to make good fuch Sums, as are raised for the Service in the Island.

And being further examined this Twenty-second Day of June 1742, said, that the Contractors allowed to Mr Colebrooks, who carried out the Money sent with Lord Cathears, one per Cent. Commission; but the surther Sums, which have

An. 16. Geo. II been since sent out, and all other Transactions relating to this Affair, have been managed by their Agents at Jamaica, to whom they are to pay two per Cent.

> And further faid, that an Action has been brought against their Agent at Jamaica by Capt. Knowles for 2 1 per Cent. Freight, for the Money which he carried out at the Time of Lord Cathcart's going on the Expedition, for which, as the Examinant is informed, Capt. Knowles has obtained a Verdict; which if the Contractors shall be obliged to pay, will be a Precedent for other Captains of Men of War, by whom Money was fent out at the same Time.

JOHN BRISTOW.

Mr Hanbury ing to the said Contract.

Examination of Harles Hanbury Williams, Esq; being examined in the most solemn Manner, this 30th Day of April, 1742, Williams, relat- said, That on the 9th Day of July last, as he thinks, being in his Chariot, he met Messieurs Burrell and Bristow, who told him, that they had made an Agreement with the Treafury for remitting Money to pay the Troops, at the Rate of 120 l. Jamaica Money for 100 l. Sterling. That after meeting Messieurs Burrell and Bristow, he went to the Treasury, and he thinks he faw Lord Catheart in one of the Rooms of the Treasury, and thinks he talked of what Messieurs Burrell and Bristow had told him to Lord Catheart, but he is not positive. That the same Day there was a Meeting at his Office in Scotland-Yard, at which were present Lord Cathcart, Capt. Alexander Wilson, Mr Burrell, Mr Bristow, and this Examinant, but he cannot say any one else in particular: He cannot fay Mr Monson was present. That this Meeting was defired that Morning either by Lord Catheart, or by Capt. Wilson, at his Instance, but he cannot tell which. He thinks they all met at the Treasury, and went from thence to the Office. That the Conversation, which lasted two Hours, turned on the proper Means of carrying Messieurs Burrell and Bristow's Contract into Execution, and preventing the Troops from being disappointed for want of Money. That he inclines to imagine, that Lord Cathcart knew that the Agreement was made. This Examinant asked Messieurs Burrell and Briftow what Money they had fent over, and what Credit they had established for this Purpose; but that this was a Question arising from his own Care and Curiofity only. That he believes Lord Catheart said, he had heard. that the Exchange in the City was 130 or 135; that if the Troops were paid at 120, the Difference might occasion an Uneafiness amongst them. That what Lord Cathcart said. was rather repining and difliking the low Rate of Exchange they had agreed for, than disputing about it. That in consequence of this Dislike of Lord Catheart's, Messieurs

Burrell and Briftow entered into a Detail about Exchanges, An. 16. Geo. II. endeavouring from thence to show, that they could not afford to remit cheaper; but this Examinant did not understand all they faid upon this Head. That Messieurs Burrell and Briflow talked of their Agreement as made, but whether at the Beginning or End of the Meeting he cannot say. That he cannot fay or remember, that Mr Burrell, at the End of the Conversation told them, he had agreed with the Treasury; nor can he fay, that he heard Lord Catheart mention the American Troops, as then paid at a higher Rate of Exchange.

N. B. Charles Hanbury Williams, Elg; being now at Bath. could not fign his Examination, but it was read over to the Committee twice, and was found to be agreeable to the Minutes then taken.

NUMB. IV.

Ames Knight, Esq; being examined in the most solemn Examination of Manner this Third Day of May, 1742, faid, That he Mr Knight relived many Years in Jamaica, from whence he came to lating to the England about five Years, and that he has many Effects, Rate of Exchange Rents, and a Plantation in that Island. That when he lived and London. there, he acted as a Factor to the Guinea Merchants, and has fold feveral Cargoes of Negroes to the South-Sea Company, which were paid for in Bills of Exchange at London, and had, by his Employments, the Means of being acquainted with the Remittance from that Island, both in Specie and in Bills. That the Exchange between Jamaica and London has, for seven Years past, varied very little, being from 140 to 135, but generally 140, very few Bills being drawn under that Rate, excepting particular Contracts in the Sales of Negroes, Estates, or other Esfects, when the Exchange has sometimes been agreed on at 35, and sometimes at 37 1, the Difference in Exchange being considered in the Purchase. The South-Sea Company in particular settled their Exchange at 35 per Cent. at which Rate they drew for considerable Sums; and in Consideration of the Exchange, and the Num. ber of Negroes they bought, they had them at a Price accordingly, the Planters paying 35 and 36 per Head, in Bills at 40 per Cent. and 38 and 40 L in Sugars, or other Produce of the Island; when the Company, by Means of their Bills being at a lower Exchange, furnished the Merchants at 31 and 32 l. per Head, Jamaica Currency. That he has now a Bill of 600 l. drawn on the Ordnance at 140, and he has had two others of 500 l. each drawn on the same Office, and other publick Bills as well as private, at the same 1742.

An. 16. Geo. II. Rate, within the last twelve Months. That the Independant Companies constantly draw at 140, as he has heard and believes, except one or two Officers, who have had Credit. That he believes, before the War, the Bills remitted from Tamaica to England, including those drawn by the South-Sea Company, may have amounted to 100,000 l. per Annum. That there are besides great Sums sent from thence to England in Specie. That before the War, it was common for fingle Men of War to bring 40 or 50,000 L from thence; and he believes, including the Money fent over by the South-Sea Company, upwards of 500,000 l. per Annum in Specie, was usually remitted from Jamaica at a Medium before the Commencement of the War. That the Specie in Jamaica confifts chiefly in Spanish Coin: There are some Spanish Pifloles and Doubloons. That there is a Law in Jamaica, made about the Year 1681, which afcertains the Currency of Spanilb Money, and makes it Felony to diminish or fallify it; tho' he has known Persons tried upon the Law, yet it is not, in general, much observed, the Coin being commonly clipt and diminished of its true Weight, and the Portugal Money is not included in it, because there was then none upon the Island. That when this Examinant heard that the Troops : were going to Jamaica, he enquired how they were to be paid; and on being told, that the Treasury would contract with private Persons for that Purpose, he did himself intend to make an Offer for the furnishing of the Money necessary; but in very few Days he heard, that the Treasury had agreed with Messieurs Burrell and Bristow, at the Rate of 120 1. Jamaica Money, for 100 1. Sterl. That this Examinant does not believe, that the Treasury ever gave Notice, that they intended any such Contract. That indeed he does not know, that a formal, publick Notice has ever been given by the Treasury on such Occasions; but he has heard, that in Queen Anne's War, the Treasury, when they had fuch Contracts in View, have communicated their Intentions to Merchants, which was, in Effect, the same Thing, and was what this Examinant expected in the present Case; and had this been done, this Examinant believes, that several others befides himfelf, would have proposed to have furnished the Government with Money at Jamgica. That this Examinant would have furnished the Money at 130 per Cent. provided he could have obtained the fame Advancement, which he has heard was made to Messieurs Burrel and Briflow; for in Proportion to his Advancement, he proposed to have made his Offer of furnishing the Troops with Money, otherwise he could not have afforded such an Exchange, and should have thought it a good Bargain. That he should have thought himself secured against any Disappointment for the the Want of Currency at Jamaica, by fending over in An. 16. Geo. II. Specie one third Part of what he might be supposed to want in Six Months Time; for that he apprehends the only Difficulty would have been at first, when the People there, on the Arrival of so great a Number of Troops, might endeayour to lower the Exchange; that afterwards he does not doubt, but he could have contracted with People on the Island, to have furnished the Money at the Rate of 137 1 per Cent. or by other Means provided the Money to answer the Occasion. That if the whole Money was advanced to him here beforehand, and he was only to fend it over, and so furnish the Money at Jamaica at the Rate of 130 per Cent. he should think that he might make 12 or 15 per Cent. per Annum, of the Money which he thus supplied, because he could return the same Money twice in the Compass of one Year. He added, that he believes the Infurance of Money on Men of War from London to Jamaica might be done at 2 per Cent. to pay 84. That the Commission which he pays to his Agents at Jamaica for transacting his Affairs, is 5 per Cent. but if he was to negotiate 30 or 40,000 l. for the Government, he would have done it, when at Jamaica, for 2 1/2 per Cent. with all his Heart; and doubts not but other Persons of Credit and Reputation in Jamaica, would have undertaken the same for the like Commission, or less.

Extract of a Letter from Brigadier General Wentworth, to his Grace the Duke of Newcastle.

Jamaica, Jan. 20, 1740-1

Must beg Leave to represent to your Grace +, that the fixing of the Payment of the Troops at 120 Jamaica Currency, will, I apprehend, be attended with Inconveniencies. Upon the Money's being tendered to the Paymasters, great Discontent was expressed by the Officers, and some actually refused to receive it; of which being immediately apprized, I have taken Measures to put a Stop to any further Complaints. But as we shall have a Detachment from the Independant Companies who are paid at 125 per Cent. I believe it will be difficult to prevent the Discontent from getting amongst the private Men. As the Exchange is always fluctuating, the Payment of the Troops according to the exact Currency, when their Pay should become due, would be attended with great Inconveniencies. But was there a proper Medium fixt, (even so low as 125 per Cent.) I believe all would be made easy.

(B)

SIR, Kingston, Jamaica, Feb. 20, 1740-1.

YOU will certainly have learnt from Messieurs Burrell and Brissow, before this Time, that their Correspondents, Merewether and Manning, had declined executing their Orders to pay to the Deputy Paymaster such Sums of Money, as those Gentlemen had by their Contract with the Lords of the Treasury agreed to furnish here for the Service of the Expedition; but it is probable those Gentlemen were not informed, that the Motive of that Resusal was, that these Factors had a View of appropriating the Profits arife by fuch Supply, to themselves. What Reasons they An. 16. Geo. 11. may have given to their Principals, I cannot fay; but at this Place, to juitify, or at least excuse, so uncommon a Procedure, they fay Mesheurs Burrell and Bristow did not propose to allow them a fufficient Commission or Provision; that it was not worth their while to undertake it for a Confideration of One per Cent. to each of them. The Truth is, they were dazzled with the Prospect of getting 15 or 20 instead of 2 per Cent. and reckoning that a much greater Sum than those Gentlemen receiv'd from the Treasury, in July, would be due to the Forces before they arrived here, finding November almost out, they made their Calculation, that they should be able to fet their own Price upon what they imagined the Deputy Paymasters would be under a Necessity of taking from them. But the further Supply you issued to Messieurs Burrell and Briflow in September, and for which they gave their Bill upon me, has put me in a Condition to answer all Occasions hitherto, and disconcerted all their Measures.

I perceived the General inclined to think favourable of the Intentions of these Persons, and yet it was not till the 25th of January, that he appeared convinced that they never intended to turnish Money upon the Account of the Gentlemen in England; at which Time Mr Manning declared in express Terms, in the Presence of General Wentworth, Mr Stewart, Lieutenant Governor of this Island, and other Gentlemen, that they would not answer Messieurs Burrell and Bristow's Credit. This was the 16th Day after I delivered Messieurs Burrell and Bristow's Letters of Credit to them, and made my Demand on them. What past between me and them, and with General Wentworth, in that Interim, you will please to see by the Copies of the Letters I send herewith.

Upon the Refusal of Merewether and Manning to surnish Money, General Wentworth desired me to stay in this Place, and endeavour to raise Money for the Use of the Troops, which I have undertaken, pursuant to the Instructions you have honoured me with; and I hope my Zeal for His Majesty's and your Service, will receive your Approbation.

I have Reason to think, that as Merewether and Manning expected to supply what Money the Troops might have Occasion for, at an immoderate Profit to themselves, that I shall meet with all possible Opposition from them and their Adherents, otherwise I could not have failed of finding all the Money I can possibly want for Bills. What the Event will be I cannot say with sufficient Certainty, more than that my Endeavours will be faithful, and, I hope, effectual.

Messieurs Merewether and Manning equainted me the 9th of January, that they had so long ago as the End of No1742.

PRENCIAL INTERPRETARION ROLLING TO 74 APPENDIX to the Farther Report, &c.

An. 16. Geo. H. wember, wrote to Messieurs Burrell and Bristow, to tell them, that whatever Sums were wanted here for the Forces, must be sent in Specie from England. They knew that an Anfwer to those Advices could not well come back to this Island till April or May, and expected in the mean Time to have supplied Money to the Troops upon their own unjust Terms. This faithless Treatment of their Principals, must have altonished and deceived Messieurs Burrell and Bristow, till the Truth comes to be developed by subsequent Letters; and upon what you will have heard from them, you have certainly been induced to fend over more Specie, a Thing that would have in no Case been necessary, if these Persons had not enter'd into the most ungrateful and unnatural Combination, to discredit their Benefactors, and distress the publick Service; and infinuating to Brigadier Blakeney, that themselves only were in a Condition to supply the Troops, which, for the Sake of the Service, as an Act of great Merit, they would find Means to do at the Rate of 110, this Currency, for 100 l. SIR, King flon, Jamaica, Mareb 23, 1740. Have now the Pleasure to acquaint you, that the Combination that had been formed here to reduce the Price of Bills for the Publick Service to 110, is entirely, dislipated. The Confederates lately made a new Effort to put a Stop to the Supplies of Money, which they found coming into my Hands, by endeavouring to borrow all the Money they could hear of; but I have now happily overcome all Opposition, and can affure you on good Grounds, that whatever Money may be necessary to be raised for the Service, will be found here for Bills on you at 130 and upwards. I fay this with Confidence from the State and Course of the Trade here; and I dare venture to advise you not to send any more Money from England in Specie, upon Account of any Doubt of my finding all that can possibly be wanted for the Use of his Majelly's Forces; and I think I am not mistaken in my Conclusion, if a War should break out with France, I shall find Money at 140 this Currency, for every 100 L. Sterl. because the Risque of sending Money Home will be greater, the Premium of Infurance must rife in Proportion, and People will give a greater Price for such Bills of Exchange, as they find by Experience are regularly discharged.

Here-under is an Account of all the Bills I have passed upon you; the 24th of February, for 1250 l. at 130, is 1625 1. the 9th of March for 2420 1. at 130, is 3146; and the 18th of March, for 1285 l. Sterk at 130, is 1670 l. to s. for all which Sums I make myself Debtor according to the

S I R,

Dated Sept. 1, 1741.

In pursuance of your Command, in the second Paragraph of your Letter of the Twenty-fifth of May, about the Discontent of the Troops, on Occasion of their being paid at the Rate of 120 l. Jamaica Currency, for 100 l. Sterling, it is my Duty to acquaint you, that the Par of Money between England and Jamaica is,

| 1. s. d. | 1. s. d. | 2. s. d. | 2. s. d. | 2. s. d. | 3. 9 Jamaica 142 | 3. 9 Jamaica

To which adding 6 per Cent. for Freight and Insurance from Jamaica to London, the Medium upon Gold is 149

Medium 135; to which adding 6 per Cent. for Freight and Insurance as before upon Silver, is _______143

I mentioned in my last of September 12, that the Officers of the Independent Companies here draw for their Pay according to the Course of Exchange, now 140, and pay the private Men at 125.

I have learnt, that when the Regiments of Cope and Hay arrived in this Island, the Assembly, in Consideration of the Dearness of all Necessaries, then passed an Act to make them an Allowance of Provisions at the Country's Expence; and I am well informed, that Provisions are at this Time tifty per Cent. dearer than they were then.

I confirm, that the Officers of the Independent Companies, have an Allowance of twenty Shillings, and each private Man five Shillings per Week, for which 10,000 L is raifed annually by the Affembly.

My Duty requires me to second your Zeal in his Majesty's Service to the utmost of my Ability, in the Dipartment you have pleased to honour me with; and it is with An. 16 Geo. II. lov that I can inform you, that by Occasion of the great Sam of Money issued by you, and brought to this Place in Specie, the Combination entered into to diffress me in raising Money for the Use of the Troops by lowering the Exchange, has been entirely broken; and from thence, and the State of the Trade to the Spanish Coast, there is Reason to be affored that the Exchange will keep up to 140, not without a Probability of its being raifed higher by proper Management; and as this favourable Circumstance may be the Means of producing very confiderable Relief to the Troops, by paying them at a higher Rate hereafter; I hope you will look upon it as an Inflance of my Ambition to make my Services agreeable to you, that I offer myfelf to undertake to draw Bills upon you at the best Course of the Exchange.

The Interest of the Merchants sending Goods to Jamaica is against the Rise of the Exchange, but I persuade myself I shall be as successful in this Attempt, as I have been hitherto in your Service; and I am fo well assured of what I advance, that should you prefer the having a certain Price fixt, I am ready to furnish any Sum of Money wanted for his Majesty's Forces at 135 certain Price, without any Charge, and that my Bills bear no less Term than four Months after Date, or fixty Days after Sight; and that I will not trouble the Office with small Bills, but pass one in two Months, or one Month the oftenest.

I fent farther to Mr Pitt, for the Use of the Forces on Cuba 6285 1. 15 s. by the Defiance, Capt. Trevor, which failed Yetlerday. I am, Sir.

Your most Obedient, and King flow, Jamaica, most bumble Servant, Sept. 1, 1741. JOHN COLEBROOKE.

(G)

Mr COLEBROOKE to Mr PELHAM.

Dated Jamaica, Sept. 7, 1741.

THE Dissatisfaction of the Officers receiving their Pay at 120 this Currency, for every 100 /. Sterling, increases every Day, and now I have found Means to bring the Exchange to 140, they complain of it as a very great Hardship. I had formerly represented to the General upon this Occasion, that the Price of 120 was fixed by Contract of the Treasury with Mestrs. Burrell and Bristow. That in 16. Gen. II. your Instructions to me to pay the Troops at that Rate was in Conformity to that Contract, under the Supposition that it was the most that could be obtained.

That it was not to be imagined, that you could order the Troops to be paid at a higher Exchange than the Price fixt with the Contractors; but that as the Contract was not answered by the Agents of Burrell and Briftow, I thought it probable I might receive your Orders to pay the Troops at a higher Rate, when you were informed of my Success in raising the Exchange.

This I have happily executed, contrary to the Inclination and Interest of some Persons, and to the Opinion and Apprehensions of others; not only unaffished by the Perfons, whose particular Stations required their supporting my laudable Attempt, but opposed and obstructed in my Meafures.

Mr COLEBROOKE to Mr PELHAM.

S I R, King flow, Jamaica, Sept. 12, 1747

Have the Mortification to acquaint you, this Discontent of the Troops increases every Day, the more, as they come to understand that the Exchange is brought to 140. and that the private Men of the Independent Companies here are paid one Royal, or 7 ! Pence this Currency for 6 d. Sterling, which answers to 125 Currency for 100 l. Sterling, and the Officer draws his Bills according to the Exchange, which is now at 140. Besides which, the Asfembly in Confideration of the Dearness of all Necessaries. allows every Capt. and Lieut. 20 Shillings Currency, and every private Man 5 s. a Week additional Pay, called here Country Subfistance.

This puts the Condition of these Independent Companies on fo much better Footing than the Forces on the Expedition, that these latter are continually expressing their Un-eafiness on the Comparison.

I can now affure you, that you may depend upon my keeping up the Exchange to 140, and raifing whatever Sum may be wanted for his Majesty's Forces, and that Bills upon you will have the Preference of all private Bills.

Kingston, Jamaica, Oct. 8, 1741. Here is nothing talked of fo much among the Officers of the Army, as the Hardship of being paid at 120. when the Exchange is at 1,40. Every one of them is become a Calculator, and complains, that he loses 16 1. 6 s. on every 100 l. For 120 Jamaica Currency is paid with 62 Moidores at 38 s. 9 d. each; which 62 Moidores is no more than 83 L 14 s. Sterling, and I have been told, that most of them have wrote to their Friends at home to apply for Redrefs, finding themselves very much straitened in a Place, where every Necessary is excessive dear.

As the General feems not inclined to order the Payment of the Troops, otherwise than Sums of Money upon Account, notwithstanding his strict Injunctions to me to be always ready, it is probable I may not be obliged to take up Monies foon; which I shall be very glad of, that I may be instructed by you, whether I am to receive Money from Messieurs Gray and Woolles, as they now offer, at 125, or pass my Bills to the Publick at 140; on which Price, and my finding all the Money that may be wanted for the Service, you may hence-forward depend. tions are pictured to the Company of the Company of Eneral Guife has wrote to Mr Colebrooke, that it is his J Opinion, he ought not to take the Money from Mr Gray at 120 for 100 I. Sterling, when he can draw at 130 and 135. That as the Agents of Burrell and Brifton would not supply Money according to the Contract with the Treafury, that it is void; and that he ought to keep drawing till he hears from Mr Pelham. There is great Murmuring amongst the Troops being paid at 120. I think if it had been settled at 125 l. it would have done better, which would have answered to the Currency of Silver here, 7 1 for 6 d. Sterling.

I don't doubt, but if I was to take all Opportunities for drawing, but I could be always fure of supplying at

May it please your Lordships,

Humbly beg Leave to lay before your Lordships, Copies Memorial to the of three Letters lately received from Mr John Colebrook, Treasury, relat- at Jamaica, the Person deputed by me to pay the Troops employ'd upon the Expedition to America, relating to the Exchange of Monies between London and Jamaica; which I thought proper to communicate to your Lordships, with a Representation of this Affair, as the same appears to me.

> That your Lordships were pleased, by Minute of the oth of July 1740, to contract and agree with Messieurs Burrell and Briftow, to furnish Money for the Payment of the faid Troops, at the Rate of 120 l. Jamaica Currency, for every 100 /. Sterling; in Pursuance whereof, my Deputy was instructed to take up Money from the Agents of the faid Contractors or Remitters at Jamaica, and draw his Bills upon me payable to them for the fame.

> That upon a Representation from Major General Winteworth, Commander in Chief of the Forces upon the faid Expedition, fetting forth the Discontent among the Troops. occasioned by their receiving no more than 120 l. Jamaica Currency, for every 100 l. Sterling; your Lordships were pleased, by Minute of the 5th of June, 1741, to make a new Agreement with the faid Messieurs Burrell and Bristow, that the Money should be furnished by them, at the Rate of the Troops should be paid at the same Rate.

That my Deputy, upon his Arrival at Jamaica, did apply to Messeurs Merewether and Manning, Agents for the Contractors, who refused to supply the Money that might be wanted for the Service of the Expedition, at 120 1. Jamaica Currency, for 100 /. Sterling; and that the faid Contractors did upon notice thereof, in the Room of Messieurs Merewether and Manning, appoint Mr John Gray, their Agent, who made an immediate Offer of all Sums as were or should be wanting for His Majesty's Service; but, previous thereto, my Deputy, apprehending a Combination was enter'd into, among some monied Men of the Island, to prevent his getting any more than 110 l. Jamaica Currency, for 100 1. Sterling, found himself under a Necessity of making use of the Credit and Power given him by his Instructions, to draw Bills upon me, as Pay-master-General, at the best Rate of Exchange that he could obtain; and hath actually drawn Bills upon me to the Amount of 29,216 /. 5 1. 3 d. at 130, 135, and some at 140 l. Jamaica Currency, for 100 l. Sterling, and makes no doubt but he shall be able to draw for all Monies that shall be wanted for the Service of the Troops, for the future, at 140 l. Jamaica Currency, for every 100 1. Sterling; which is confirmed by Brigadier-General Guife, as his Opinion also, in a Letter of the 4th of September, a Copy whereof is hereunto annexed.

That he hath kept a distinct Account of the Profit of Difference between the Rate, at which the Troops have been paid, and the Rate at which his several Bills have been drawn according to his Instructions; but that the said Remitters have been furnished with Money from my Office, to take up, and discharge the Bills so drawn by my Deputy upon me; they concluding, that by Virtue of their Contract with your Lordships, they have a Right to the said Profits or Difference, and expect that the same should be carried to their Account, and paid over into the Hands of their Agents at Jamaica.

I therefore humbly pray your Lordships Orders and Directions, whether the said Profit, or Differences, arising by Exchanges, shall be accounted for and paid to the Agents of the said Contractors, or reserved in the Hands of my Deputy, for the Use and Benefit of the Publick.

Which is bumbly submitted to your Lordships.

NUMB. VIII.

May it please your Lordships,

Representation Contract.

Mefficurs Burrell WE having received, by Order of your Lordships, a and Brillow's Copy of a Memorial from the Paymaster-General of his Majesty's Forces, dated the 15th of December last, containing to the Treasury a State of the Transactions at Jamaica, relating to the Exchange, and Pay of the Troops there, and referring to feveral Letters from his Deputy in that Island, dated the 1st, 7th, and 12th of September last; also a Letter from Brigadier General Guife, dated the 4th of September, to all which your Lordships are pleased to require our Answer; in Obedience thereto, we beg Leave to lay before you, in the first Instance, the Reasons upon which our Contract was founded in its original Price of 120, and Augmentation afterwards to 125. The Rule for fixing any Price of Exchange could only be found by the Probability of the Rate at which Money might be raised in Jamaica; and in order to attain that Knowledge, we endeavoured to procure Bills here on Jamaica, but could not succeed even at 120 l. It is well known the Island of Jamaica has no Species of its own, but is supplied chiefly, if not entirely, by what it draws from the Spanish West-Indies for Balance of Trade, and of this a very small Quantity does or can remain in the Island: for this Reason, because Silver, in which that Balance is paid, bears a higher Price in England, in Proportion to the Exchange, than it does at Jamaica; and the Currency of the Illand Island is so inconsiderable, that it is extremely difficult to An. 16. Geo. II. recover Debts of any Kind, but in Sugar, or some other Produce of the Plantation.

The Par of Exchange between England and Jamaica is deemed to be 125 l. for every 100 l. Sterl. but as the Exchange between any two Places depends upon many Contingencies and Incidents, no fixt Price or Course can be ascertained, but as more or less Money is to be paid at one Place or the other. it must eternally vary. The Exchange might be at 125 or higher, whilst the Island of Jamaica remained on the same Footing with regard to England, which it had been for many Years; but the Moment England was obliged to pay fo large a Sum in Jamaica, for Subliftence of the Troops, the Case must alter, as it did with regard to Colonel Blakeney, who, before the Arrival of the Forces under General Wentavorth, could, with Difficulty, raife a small Sum for Subfiftance of the American Regiment at 120; and had not this inevitable Consequence been foreseen by us, and the Money for the Whole to have been raised upon the Island, no Man can fay at what Rate the Persons in Possession of the Currency would have given it, or what Price the Exchange would have fallen to; but if a Judgment may be formed from the above Instance, it must have been greatly under 120. The Pay of an Independent Company cannot bear a Parallel with the present Case, as there is no Proportion in the Sums to be raised. Upon these Considerations it became incumbent on us, for the publick Service, as well as for our own Safety, to remove the Difficulties, which attended the railing the Money there. And the only Expedient left to avoid the Imposition of the Persons, who were in Possession of the Currency, was to provide a new one, in some Meafure, independent of them. This we did, by fending out, at our own Risque and Charge, the proper Funds for that Purpole. And your Lordships were pleased to direct the Payment of a Sum of Money to us, upon our furnishing the Paymaster-General our Bills at Jamaica for the Amount; which was accordingly done, and the Bills punctually difcharged. The Receipt of this Money at Jamaica had the defired Effect, as it broke a Combination, which was actually entered into, to lower the Exchange and diffress the Service, and by which Monies were foon raifed by Draughts from thence at 130, which enabled us to alter the Price from 120 10 125.

And as this Money was the fole Caufe of supporting the Exchange in the Beginning, so to that, together with what has been since sent out, and the great Reduction of the Pay from the satal Mortality among the Troops, must be attributed the surther Rise of the Exchange to 135, and 140.

An. 16. Geo. II. And we beg Leave to remark, that had the Money fent out by us miscarried, the Exchange must have been governed by the arbitrary Will of the Persons possessed of the Currency of the Island.

Messieurs Merewether and Manning, whom we appointed our Agents at Jamaica, did resuse to comply with a Demand made on them by Mr Colebrooke, for the immediate Payment of a Sum of Money, and also what might be surther wanted for the Service of the Expedition, at 120; and the Reason alledged for this Resusal was, Mr Colebrooke's absolute Denial of their Request to be informed what Part of the Money brought out by the Deputies, had been issued, what Sums were then wanted, and what Sums would be necessary from Time to Time to be raised for carrying on the Service. This Denial of Mr Colebrooke, and his peremptory Demand without Limitation, we conceive must have been calculated to deter our Agents from the Execution of our Orders, and he thereby get the Transaction of the whole Assair into his own Hands.

As foon as we received Notice of what had happened between the Deputies and Messieurs Merewether and Manning, we made an Alteration in our Agency, acquainting your Lordships therewith, and in the Room of the former appointed Mr John Gray our Agent, who made an immediate Offer of all such Sums as were or should be wanting for his Majesty's Service, at 125, agreeable to a new Engagement we had entered into with your Lordships.

As Mr Colebrooke could no longer pretend Refusal on the Part of our Agents, of the Payment of any Sum of Money which he should require, he pleads the want of Orders, and that our Contract was at an End, notwithstanding Notice was given him of the new one made with your Lordships at 125, and under these Pretences he refused to accept of the Offer made him by our Agent, and continues to draw himself on the Paymaster-General.

The Affurance that Mr Colebrooke gives to the Paymaster-General, that the Exchange must be kept up at 140, appears to us most extraordinary, as we think nothing in Nature can be more precarious or uncertain than the Course of that Exchange.

The Computations made by Mr Colebrooke in his Letter of the 1st of September are erroneous in Part, and extremely fallacious in the whole. Pistoles, instead of the Price which he mentions of 16 s. 8 d. are not to be bought under 17 s. 2 d. and Moidores of 27 s. not to be found for any large Sum, the Non-Coinage of this Particular Specie for many Years having render'd it very scarce. The Addition of 6 per Cent. to this Computation for Freight and Infurance An. 16. Geo. 11. from Jamaica to London, is placed directly contrary to what it ought to be. It is a necessary Charge upon the Remitter, who fends it from hence, and at whose Expence it got thither, and by which Means alone the Exchange bears any Price at all. His Computation on Silver is equally erroneous; the Price which he mentions to be q s. 6 d. in England, has been, fince the Commencement of the War with spain, and will probably remain so during the Continuance of it, from 5 s. 7 d. to 5 s. 7 d. for Pieces of Eight, and so in Proportion for small Pieces, which upon a Medium of 7 s. 3 d. and 7 s. 2 d. Jamaica Currency, forms an Exchange of about 128 } per Cent.

Mr Colebrooke, to complete the whole, ventures, in his Letter September 7, to write to the Pay-master General, that by his Succeis, his Majesty's Troops had been supplied 20 to 30 per Cent. better or cheaper than they would have been by our Agents. In order to give your Lordships all the Light in our Power, we beg leave to lay before you the real State of the following Species mentioned in Mr Colebrooke's Letter, in respect to their Price here, their Value in Jamaica, and what the Produce is to the Remitter, after Deduction of the Charges they paid for the fame, viz.

Moedas at 1 7 Ditto, 1 18 9 143 2 to 138 2

The Medium of the above Species produce for every 100 l. Sterling Jamaica Currency about _____ 139 Deduct there out the following Charges paid by us on

Remittances to Jamaica:

1 per Cent. Freight to Jamaica.

L. 7 per Cent. Computed on 139 the above Medium

The Price contracted for now being 100 L Sterling for 125 Jamaica, deduct the faid -

Then their remains a Profit, Jamaica Currency the Sum of 4 l. on 139 to not quite 3 per Cent. which we presume will not be thought by your Lordships unreasonable, con-

Sidering

An. 16. Geo. II. sidering the Trust we are obliged to put in Agents, at that Distance, and the great Hazard that attends all Transactions in those Parts; to which we must again repeat, that as the Rife of the Exchange was entirely owing to the Money fent only by us, had that Money miscarried, we must have felt the Inconveniency of a want of Currency for the Subfistance of the Troops, and been exposed to the Mercy of those Persons, who were engaged in a Combination to make their Advantage of it, and the Profit now made, no way equal to what we must in that Case have fuffered. And this leads us to take Notice of what the Paymatter General defires in his Memorial, that your Lordships will give Orders, and Directions, for disposing of the Profits for Difference by Exchange, on the Bills drawn upon him by his Deputy. As we humbly conceive by our Contract with your Lordships, we engaged and obliged ourselves to furnish the Pay of the Troops, at a certain Rate, and had the before-mentioned Combination taken Effect, and the Exchange thereby fallen under that Rate, or the Funds fent out been attended with Lofs, such Difference or Lofs must necessarily have been borne by us. Therefore we humbly submit it to your Lordships, that we are in Equity entituled to the Profit, that shall arise from such Draughts, and that the same be carried to our Account and paid over to our Agents at Jamaica.

> Peter Burrell. John Brillow.

Mr Daniel's Let TNclosed is the Affidavit as defired. I should be glad to know how the Petition succeeds for Costs out of the Juflices Fines.

And it being in particular asked this Examinant, sterif Sir Charles Wager did not say to this Examinant, What shall we do in this Affair? and if Sir Charles did not inquire of Mr Shepherd whether the Fees were to be paid, or if Sir Charles Wager did not defire Mr Shepherd to receive the Money? The Examinant faid, that he does not recollect any of these Circumstances, nor can he remember that he was present when any such Order was brought to Sir Charles Wager: That Sir Charles Wager did say to the Examinant, that he was in Expectation of getting some Money for Mr Lever, the High Bailiff of Westminster, to assist him, Mr Lever then being in great Distress; for he being a Brewer had loft his Cultomers, and was forced to keep at Home to avoid his Creditors. That when the Examinant returned one Day from the Navy Board, Sir Charles Wager told him, that in his Absence 1500 /. had been brought him by one of the Treasury, and Sir Charles desired this Examinant to take the Money and pay it to Mr Lever: That the Examinant received the 1500 l. from Sir Charles Wager the 2d of January last: That Mr Lever sometime before this, tho' the Examinant believes it could not be a Fortnight, applied to Sir Charles Wager, and mentioned the Distress he was in for Money to pay his Maltster; that Sir Charles had been told the King would give him (Lever) fome Money, and thereupon Sir Charles lent him 500 %. for which the Examinant thought it proper to take a Bond. That on the 3d of January last, Mr Lever had of this Examinant 1000 L that is 500 L in ready Money, and 500 L. to pay off the aforementioned Bond. That on the 6th of January Mr Gooffree brought to the Examinant a Bill of Costs on an Information against Mr Lever, &c. relating, as this Examinant imagines, to the Election at Wellminster, which amounted to 124 l. 14 s. and this Bill the Examinant paid on Mr Lever's Account. That on the 9th of February the Examinant paid a Bill of 107 1. 12 s. 6 d. for Fees and Expences during Mr Lover's being in Cullody with the Serleant at Arms; and that on the 27th of February, the Examinant paid to Mr Lever 267 l. 19 s. which he conceived to be the Balance remaining in his Hands of the 1500 L and for which he has Mr Lever's Receipt, but by what Acci-1743. p dent

Examination of the Secretary of relating to Money paid him by Warrant from the Crown.

WOhn David Barbutt, Esq; Secretary to the Post-Office, be-I ing examined in the most solemn Manner, this 18th Day the Post-Office, of May 1742, and being asked as to the Disposition of the Money paid into his Hands without Account, by a Warrant from the Crown, faid, That there is in the Post-Office a private Office for the inspecting foreign Correspondence, and that the greatest Part of that Money is for the defraying the Expence of this Office. That the Accountant General and Receiver General, who have inspected the Books, have told him, that the first Traces they find of any Money thus paid by Warrant, was in the Year 1718. That this Examinant cannot fay as to the first Establishment of this Office, having been but three Years and a Half himself in the Post Office; but he apprehends there was always an Office of this Kind, and that it was defrayed formerly by the Secretary of State: That he is a Stranger to the Bufiness of the Office, having never been in it, for they pretend to be independent.

APPENDIX to the Farther Report, &c. 115

That the annual Expences of this Office are as follows, To the chief Decypherer, Dr Willes*, for himself and his Son, 1000 l. to the second Decypherer, Mr Corbiere, 800 l. to the third Decypherer, Mr Lampe, 500 L to the fourth Decypherer, Mr Zolman, 200 1. to the chief Clerk, Mr Le Fevre, 650 L to the four other Clerks, Mestrs Bode, Thouveis, Clark, Hemmitt, 300 l. each; to the Comptroller of the Foreign Office, Mr Day, 60 L to the Door-Keeper, 40 or 50 %. but this Examinant believes 50 1. There are besides, accidental Charges for Seals, &c. an Account of which is brought in by one of the Clerks, which may amount to 100 /. and to Mr Lavalade, formerly Alphabet-Keeper, but now fuperannuated, 40 1, that when these Sums were discharged. the Overplus, which may amount to go I is divided between the two Post-masters and the Secretary, each Post-master taking three Sevenths, and the Secretary one Seventh: That Mr Le Feure, besides his above-mentioned Salary, is paid something out of Incidents, so that his whole Salary may amount to about, as he believes, 800 1. per Annum. That his (Mr Le Eeure's) is a very troublesome Post, it being necessary he should always be present at the going out and coming in of the Mails. That this Examinant does not know of a Pension of 200 l. per Annum paid out of this Money, but Mr Clark, who has formerly attended, and is incapacitated at present, has 200 1. paid him out of his Salary of 300 1. and another attends for him.

As there is at this Time a large Body of British Forces in Flanders, and Embarkations thither still continued; we presume the following Account of the Total Monies voted by Parliament during the Course of Queen Anne's War, from 1702 to 1712, will be acceptable.

The several Years Provisions are transcribed from the printed Votes, except in one Instance in the Year 1710, where those Prints were erroneous, as appears by Comparing the Journals, in the Case of 20,200 l. printed instead of 220,000 l. voted for Augmentation Troops in Flanders.

In the foregoing Volume, Anno 14, Geo. II. P. 29. We took Notice of a Motion having been made on the 11th of December 1740, for the new-rais'd Men to be incorporated into the Standing Corps, as being less burthenfome and expensive than forming them into new Regiments: Since the Publication whereof, the following Speeches, in the Debate on that Motion, having come to hand, We think them too important to be omitted: And if hereafter any material Speeches occur, we shall not fail to insert them in the succeeding Volumes.

A N Estimate of the Expence of raising the said 10,000 Men having been presented to the House, the same was referred to the Committee of Supply: On this Occasion Sir William Yonge, Secretary at War, open'd the Debate Sir W. Yonge, with a Speech to the following Effect:

Sir,

As this Essimate has been drawn up after very accurate Calculations and careful Enquiries, I hope that no Objections will be raised against it, and that the Sum necessary for raising the new Regiments will be very readily granted by that House, which voted the War necessary for which they are designed.

I hope, it will be admitted as some Proof of Frugality, that this Estimate requires less Money than one that was laid before the Parliament in the Reign of King William; for if it be considered, that since that Time the Necessaries of Life are become dearer, and that, therefore, all Expences are encreased, it will appear to be the Essect of the exactest OEconomy, that the Sum required for the same Service is less.

I have heard indeed, Sir, that in Conversation, the Method of raising Troops on this Occasion has been censured as improper, and that in the Opinion of some, whose Judgment cannot be entirely disregarded, it would be more reasonable to add more Men to our Regiments already established, than to raise new Regiments with new Officers.

The chief Argument, Sir, produced in support of their Method of Augmentation, is drawn from the Necessity of publick Frugality, a very popular Topic, which never fails to produce Favour and Attention; for every Man is naturally inclined to hear his Friend, and to consider that Man as performing the Office of Friendship, who proposes Methods of alleviating his Taxes.

Frugality is undoubtedly a Vertue very necessary to the Happiness of the Nation, and such as there occur frequent

Occasions of inculcating to those who are introded with the Superintendence of publick Disbursements, but, I am sar from thinking that this Estimate affords any Opportunity for Declamations of this Kind, and am of Opinion that the Addition of new Soldiers to each Regiment, would, in reality, be more expensive.

It cannot be denied, Sir, that by augmenting the Regiments, there would be immediately faved to the Publick the Expence of the Officers which are necessary in the Method now proposed; but it is to be considered how much the Number of Officers contributes to the Regularity and Discipline of the Troops, and how much Discipline and Order promote their Success. It is to be considered, Sir, that the most successful Method of making War is undoubtedly the cheapest, and that nothing is more expensive than Deleats.

'If by raising the same Number of Men under sewer-Officers, we should give our Enemies any Advantage : if a single Party should be cut off, a Garrison forced, an Expedition rendered fruitless, or the War protracted but a sew Months, where will be the Advantage of this admired Frugality? What would be the Consequence, but the same or a greater Expence, not to gain Advantages, but to repair Losses, and obviate the Effects of our former Parlimony?

In private Life, Sir, it is common for Men to involve themselves in Expense only by avoiding it, to repair Hooses at greater Charges than new ones might be built, and to pay Interest rather than the Debt. Weak Minds are frighted at the Mention of extraordinary Efforts, and decline large Expenses, though Security and future Affluence may be purchased by them; as tender Bodies shrink from severe Operations, though they are the certain Methods of restoring Health and Vigour. The Effects of this Timidity are the same in both Cases, the Estate is impaired insensibly, and the Body languishes by Degrees, till no Remedy can be applied.

Such Examples, Sir, are frequent, and the Folly of imits-

Track by which he has feen others led to Destruction? Nor need we fearch for remote Illustrations to discover the destructive Tendency of unseasonable Tenderness for the Publick, for I believe the whole History of the Wars of King William will prove, that too close an Attention to Parsimony is incon-fillent with great Atchievements.

It may be expected that I who cannot claim any Regard in this Disquisition from my own Experience, should produce some decilive Evidence in favour of the Method which I have taken upon me to desend; this Expectation I shall endeavour to satisfy by alledging the Authority of the greatest Commander of latter Ages, whom neither his Friends nor his Enemies will deny to have been well versed in these Subjects, and whose Success is a sufficient Proof of the Soundness of his Principles.

The illustrious Duke of Marlborough was of Opinion, that the whole Force of the French Armies confissed in the Number of the Officers, and that to be always equal to them in the Field, it was necessary to form our Troops nearly upon the same Plan; to this Scheme he conformed in his Practice of War, and how much his Practice confirmed his Opinion.

nion, let Blenbeim and Ramilies attelt.

As I pretend not to have determined myself on this Question, otherwise than by Authority, and as I know not any Authority equal to that of the Duke of Marlborough, I cannot discharge the Trust reposed in me by my Country, any otherwise than by proposing, that on this Occasion we agree to grant to his Majesty the Sum calculated for raising the new Regiments, as I believe that Method of Augmentation most likely to produce Success in our Undertakings, and consequently to procure a speedy Conclusion of the War.

Mr. Pultoney spoke next to the following Effect.

Mr. Pulteney.

'I have been so long accustomed to the Debates of this House, and have so often attended to the Eloquence of the Right Honourable Gentleman, that I am never startled at Paradoxes, nor shocked at Absurdities. I can now hear with great Tranquility a Harangue upon the Necessity of Placemen in this House, upon the Usefulness of Standing Armies, and the Happiness of a general Excise.

I am no longer offended with Facts quoted in Opposition to History, nor with Calculations drawn up without Regard to the Rules of Arithmetick; I know that there are Persons in this House, who think themselves obliged to speak even when in their own Opinion nothing can be said with Weight or with Propriety, who come hither prepared against the Shame of Consutation, and determined not to be convinced.

To reason with such Men, Sir, is indeed no pleasing Task, it is to fight with enchanted Heroes upon whom the common Wespons of Argument have no Effect, and who must be softened by a Counter-Charm before they can be attacked with any Prospect of Success.

'There are some, however, of whom I am willing to believe that they dispute only for Truth, and enquire with the View of attaining a Solution of their Doubts. For the sake of these, Sir. I think it necessary to declare my Sentiments, as I shall be desirous, in my turn, to hear their Sentiments:

but with regard to those whose Opinion I know already by their Posts, I should think it of great Advantage to the Dispatch of publick Affairs, if they would content themselves with voting for their Pay, without any Ambition of other Service, or adding the Praise of Volubility to that of Steadiness.

Having this Opportunity, Sir, of declaring my Opinion of the Measures pursued in regulating our military Preparations, I shall not confine myself entirely to the present Question, but lay before the House my Thoughts upon some Parts of the Establishment, which may perhaps require a Resorm, and which are at least proper Objects of Consideration, though not absolutely necessary to the Determination of our Opinion upon the present Motion.

I have long ago, Sir, declared, what therefore it is scarcely of any Use to repeat, that I know not any Advantage to be hoped from a Standing Army, nor can discover why the ablest and most vigorous of the Inhabitants of this Kingdom should be seduced from the Loom, the Anvil, and the Plough, only to live at ease upon the Labour of Industry, only to infust their Landlords, and rob the Farmers. I never could find why any Body of Men should be exempt from the common Labour of social Duties, or why they should be sapported by a Community, who contribute neither to its Honour nor its Desence.

I doubt not, Sir, but I shall hear on this Occasion of the Service of our Troops in the Suppression of Riots; we shall be told, by the next pompous Orator who shall rise up in Defence of the Army, that they have often dispersed the Smugglers, that the Colliers have been driven down by the Terror of their Appearance to their subterraneous Fortifications, that the Weavers in the midst of that Rage which Hunger and Oppression excited, sled at their Approach, that they have at our Markets bravely regulated the Price of Butter, and sometimes, in the utmost Exertion of heroic Fury, broken those Eggs which they were not suffered to purchase at their own Terms.

Some one perhaps of more Penetration, may inform us of the Use which has been made of them at Elections, where the surly Burgesses have been sometimes blind to the Merit of those worthy Gentlemen, whom the Soldiers have known how to Essem according to their Desert; nor indeed do I see how those can resuse their Votes in Favour of our Troops, who are indebted for the Power of giving them, to their kind Interposition.

'To these Arguments, Sir, I shall content myself with answering, that those, who are versed in the History of Britain, know, that we have had Colliers and Weavers for many Years before a Standing Army was heard of among us, and that it is, nevertheless, no where recorded that any of our Kings were deposed by those formidable Bodies of Men, or that any remarkable Changes were made by them in the Form of our Government; and, therefore, till some Reason shall be alledged, why such Insurrections are now more dangerous, and our civil Magistrates more impotent than in former Ages, I humbly conceive that even without the Protection of a Standing Army we might yet sleep in Security, notwithstanding the Plots of the Colliers and the Combinations of the Weavers.

But I must own, Sir, these are not our only Enemies, for there is somewhere, yet in Existence, a Person that lays Claim to the Dominion of these Kingdoms, and pleads an hereditary Title to dispose of our Wealth, to subvert our Liberties, and destroy our Religion.

If any Foreigner, Sir, unacquainted with our Affairs, were to be at present at our Debates, and hear with what Ardour we animate each other to an obstinate Resistance of this Pretender to the Throne, how often he is represented as hovering over us, and how often we have caught a general Panic, and imagin'd ourselves upon the Verge of Destruction, how often our most zealous Patriots take Opportunities of declaring their Resolution to die in the Desence of their Liberties, and how pathetically our most elegant Declaimers have expatiated on the Misery of that unhappy Race whom they should leave behind to groan under the Oppression of absolute Power, what would be his Opinion of this Pretender, whom he saw so perpetually dreaded, against whom so many Alliances were formed, so many Armies were levied, and so many Navies equipped?

Would he not believe him to be some sormidable Tyrant in a Neighbouring Country, the Lord of wide Dominions, and the Master of numerous Armies and powerful Fleets? Would he not imagine that he could assemble half the Continent at his Call, that he was supported by powerful Alliances, and that nothing but a fair Wind was required to land him on our Coasts at the Head of Millions? And would he not, even on that Supposition, be inclin'd to censure us as timerous, as somewhat regardless of the Honour of our Nation, and condemn us for giving Way to such Suspicions and Exclamations as have a natural Tendency to heighten the Appreh nsion of Danger, and depress the Spirits of the

But what would be his Conclusion, Sir, when he should be told, what in reality is true, that this dreadful Pretender is an unhappy Fugitive, driven in his Infancy from this Country, and by Confequence without any personal Interest; that he is supported by the Charity of a Prince whose Name is hated almost by every Inhabitant of the Kingdom; that he has heither Sovereignty, nor Money, nor Alliances, nor Reputation in War, nor Skill in Policy; that all his Actions are watched by British Spies; and that the sew Friends that remain to support the Farce of a Court, are such only as dare not return to their Native Country, and are therefore without Fortune, and without Dependants?

What could a wife Man conceive of a Nation held in continual Alarms by an Enemy like this; of a Nation always watchful against an Invasion from a Man who has neither Dominions to supply, nor Money to hire, a single Regiment; from a Man whose Title all the neighbouring Princes disown, and who is at such a Distance from them, that he cannot be assisted by them without open Preparations, of which we cannot fail of having Intelligence, and which may be descated, without Danger, by the Vessels regularly station'd on our Coasts ?

Would not any Stranger imagine, Sir, that we were a Nation infected with a general Frenzy, that Cowardice had perverted our Imaginations, filled us with Apprehensions of impossible Invasions, raised Phantoms before our Eyes, and distracted us with wild Ideas of Slavery and Tyranny, Oppression on and Persecution?

'I have dwelt thus long on this Point, because I know the Pretender is the last Refuge of those who defend a Standing Army; not that I propose to convince any Man of the Folly of such Apprehensions, or to fortify him against such Terrors for the Time to come; for if any Man, in reality, now dreads the Pretender, Fear must be his Distemper, he is doom'd to live in Terrors, and it is of no Importance whether he dreads an Invasion or a Goblin, whether he is afraid to distand the Army, or to put out his Candle in the Night, his Imagination is tainted, and he must be cured, not by Argument, but by Physick.

But the greatest Part of those who disturb our Consultations with the Mention of the Pretender, are Men of a very different Character. Men equally unconcerned about his Designs, or his Motions, with those who are most defirous of setting the Nation free from the Burthen of an Army, and very often such as we may discover, from their Conduct, to be determined to comply with every Government, and such as have therefore nothing to fear from a Change of Masters.

The Men for whose sake I am now speaking, Sir, laugh as much as I do at the Apprehensions of those whom they contribute to terrify: they know too well the Impotence of the Pretender to dread an Invasion from him, and affect only to continue their Outcries, that they may not be deprived of a Topic, on which, by long Practice, they have attained an uncommon Facility of Haranguing, which they know how to divertify with various Combinations of Circumstances, and how to accommodate to any emergent Occasion without the Pain of torturing their Inventions.

It may be useful, Sir, to inform these Men, that their Disguise ought at last to be thrown off, because it deceives no longer, and that the Nation cannot be cheated, but at the Expence of more Cunning than they are willing, or perhaps able, to display. A Mask must necessarily be thrown aside, when instead of concealing, it discovers him by whom it is used.

Those who are attempting, Sir, to deceive others, and whose Character is exalted, in their own Opinion, in proportion to the Success of their Endeavours, have surely a Sense of Shame, though they have none of Virtue; and cannot without Pain, find their Artifices detected, and themselves made the Objects of Ridicule, by those Stratagems which they employ for the Deception of others.

Declaimers on the exploded Story of the Pretender, will change their Bugbear, that if it be necessary to frighten those whom they want Art or Eloquence to persuade, they will find out some other Object of Terror, which, after a little Practice in private Meetings, they may first produce in the Court, and then turn loofe in the Parliament.

The World, methinks, allows them a sufficient Choice of Tyrants more formidable than the Pretender. Suppose they should revive the History of the Mobocks. The Mobocks are a dreadful Race, not to be mentioned without Horrer by a true Lover of his Country, and a steady Adherent to the House of Hanover; they might then very easily encrease our Army, or inhance our Taxes; for who would not be urged by his Wife and Daughter to agree to any Measures that might secure them from the Mobocks?

But as an Army is at present likely to be kept up for our Desence against an Enemy less formidable, it may be more seasonable to propose the Regulation than the Dismission of our Troops, and to mention those Evils which arise from the present Establishment, rather than those which are inseparable from the Expence of a standing Force.

If it be necessary, Sir, to support Soldiers, I suppose that it will not be denied by the Advocates for an Army, that we ought to levy such Troops as may be of use; yet in their Vol. XIII.

Practice they seem to have paid very little Regard to this Principle. Our Troopers are mounted upon Horse which can serve no Purpose but that of Show, which may indeed wheel about in the Park with a formidable Air, but can neither advance upon an Enemy with Impetuosity nor retreat from him with Expedition; and which, therefore, though purchased by the Nation at a very high Price, and supported at a large Expence, can only grace a Review, but are of very little Use in an Enemy's Country, and must perish in the March, or stand unactive in the Battle.

Nor is much more Service to be expected, Sir, from their Riders than from the Horses, for there are very sew of them acquainted with the first Elements of their Profession, or who have ever learned more than a few Postures of Exercise, and the Meaning of a few Words of Command, but have a Number of Officers with large Appointments.

The French Troops, Sir, if they are doubly officer'd, are officer'd and maintain'd at a less Expence, and to greater Effect; for the Soldiers are better instructed, and the same Number of Men cost not, perhaps, much more than half the Charge of a British Regiment.

'The Guards, Sir, that are maintained about this Metropolis, for no other Purpole than to keep up the Splendor of a modern Court, cost the Nation yearly such a Sum as would be sufficient to support an Army of Frenchmen, for the Protection of their Frontier Towns, or the Invasion of neighbouring Countries.

For my Part, I cannot see what Injury would be done to the Nation by abolishing an Establishment, at the same Time both useless and expensive, and employing that Money which is at present squandered upon Idlers without Effect, upon Levies of useful Soldiers for marching Regiments, who might be employed, when Occasion should require them, in the Service of their Country.

Body of Men, many of whom are Perfons of the highest Merit, and who have generally purchased their Commissions, might very justly complain of being deprived, without a Crime, of that which they have bought at its full Value, and to which therefore they imagine themselves intituled, till they shall furseit their Right by some Offence against the Laws, or some Neglect of their Duty.

I shall not, Sir, at present enquire into the Justice of this Plea, nor examine, whether he who purchases an Employment, which he knows to be useless, and therefore burthensome to the Public, deserves, that the Public should be solicitous to support him in the Enjoyment of it: But I shall declare,

Officers of the Guards to be Men of Honour, who would gladly exchange their Posts, so chargeable to the Nation, for an Opportunity of serving it, and who are not very anxious for the Increase of their Pay, so they may not be degraded from their present Rank.

If these Gentlemen, Sir, might, in the Regiments that should be raised by disbanding the Guards, be advanced to higher Commissions, though with some Diminution of their Pay, they would imagine themselves abundantly compensated by the Happiness of becoming useful Subjects, and serving that Nation by which they have been hitherto supported only to fill up the Pomp of Levees, and add to the Magnissence of Drawing Rooms, to loiter in Anti-Chambers, and to quarrel at Gaming-Tables.

If this Scheme should not be approved, the Method eligible, in the next Degree, seems to be, that of incorporating our new Levies into the Regiments already raised, that being affociated with Men already acquainted with Discipline, they may learn their Duty much more expeditiously than in separate Bodies, where one Officer will be obliged to attend to the Instruction of great Numbers, and where no Man will be excited to Application, because no Man will see any Degree of Excellence, which he may be ambitious of attaining.

I have, indeed, heard no Reason alledged for the Necessity of new Levies, which appeared likely to convince even those by whom it was produced. It appears to me that our present Army is more than sufficient for the publick Service without an Augmentation, and that some of our Regiments might immediately embark, not only without Danger to the Nation, but with far greater Hopes of Success, as our Enemies would have less Time to strengthen their Fortifications, and collect their Troops, and as disciplined Forces are more formidable than Troops newly levied; for Discipline must be of great Efficacy to the Success of military Undertakings, or all Arguments which have been used in the Deseace of a Standing Army sail to the Ground.

In Answer to this Proposal, we shall probably be once again intimidated with an Invasion, whether from the Pretender, the Spaniards, the French, or any other Power, it is of no great Importance. An Invasion is a formidable Sound, the Sack of Towns, the Destruction of Villages, the Captivity of our Children, the Ruin of our Fortunes, and the Desolation of our Country are frightful Images, and may therefore be successfully produced, on this Occasion, to perplex our Thoughts, and embarrals our Enquiries.

But if it be remembered what in that Time, the Method of obtaining Commissions, and who it was that had the Disposal of them, it will appear,

To remove therefore this Panic, and to difficulte, for ever, the Phantoms of Invation, I will lay before the House the Opinion of the Great Commander whose Name has already been introduced in this Debate. In the late Reign, on a Day when the great Officers of the Crown, and many of the Council, were at a publick Feaft in the City, a Report was suddenly foread, that the Duke of Ormand had landed in the West with two thousand Men. This Account was in Appear ance well attested, and universally believed; all Joility was therefore at an End, the Company departed, the Council was fummoned, and every Man offered fuch Expedients as his present Thoughts, confused and oppressed with the Proximity of the Danger, fuggethed to him. One proposed that a Body of Troops should be sent to a distant Part of the Kingdom, to restrain the Seditions of the Populace; another apprehended more Danger from a different Quarter, and advised that the Inhabitants should be awed by another Detach ment sent thicker; the most experienced easily faw the Uni profitableness of the Measures proposed, but could not so eas fily firike out more efficacious Expedients, and therefore fat in great Perplexity. Lord Somers particularly shook his Head, and seemed to consider the Kingdom as in the Hands of the Invaders, and the dreadful Pretender as feated on the Throne.

' At last the Duke of Marlborough, who had hitherto fat filent, ask'd calmly, whether they were certain that any Forces were really landed? and was answered, that though it might not be absolutely certain, yet they were to consult and fend Orders upon that Supolition. Then, says he, I will lay down this great Rule to be observed invariably, whenever you are inyaded. Attend only to one Point, nor have any other Purpole in view than that of destroying the regular Forces that shall be landed in the Kingdom, without any Regard to petty Infurrections, which may be always eafily quelled, and which will probably cease of themselves, when the Army, by which they were excited, is cut off. For this End let it be your Rule to keep your Army undivided, and to make no Motion but towards the Enemies, fight them with the utmost Expedition, before they can fortify themselves to receive Re-inforcements from the Continent. By the Observation of this plain Method of Operation, continued he, I will engage without any other Force than the Regiments generally flationed about the Capital, to put a Stop to any Troops that shall be landed on the Coast of Great Britain.

' So far was this great Officer, who was acquainted with the whole Art of War, from finking into Aftonishment at the Sound of an Invasion, and so far from thinking it necessary, that the Nation should be harrassed by Standing Troops, to preserve it from being plundered by a foreign Army.

But though our Troops, Sir, should not be necessary to prevent an Invasion, they may be useful in Services of equal Importance: The Ministry may think the Votes of the Officers more serviceable than their Swords, and may be more afraid of exposing themselves than the Nation by any Detachment of their Forces.

try, that neither in Peace nor War are any Measures taken, but with a View of encreasing or confirming the Power of the Ministry; for this Purpose those Troops, whose Officers have Seats here, are to be retained at home, and the Fate of our West India Settlements to be committed to new levied Forces without military Skill.

For this Reason is an Army to be raised without Necessity, and raised in a Manner that may furnish the Court with an Opportunity of extending its Instuence, by the Disposal of great Numbers of new Commissions. By this Plan every Family that is burthened with a Relation, whose Vices have ruined his Fortune, or whose Stupidity disqualifies him for Employment, will have an Opportunity of selling, for a Commission, their Interest at the approaching Election; Dependance will be propagated, and the troublesome Spirit of Liberty be depressed.

Officers will be equally Ignorant, that Discipline is not infused inflantaneously, that a military Dress will not make a Soldier, that Men can only know their Duty by Instruction, and that nothing is to be hoped from Ploughmen, and Manusacturers commanded by School-boys. The Success of the Expedition is not so much considered by those who have the Direction of the Levies, as that of the Election, and while they keep their Posts they are very little concerned about the Affairs of the West Indies.

In Defence of this Method it has, indeed, been affirmed, that it was preferred by the Duke of Marlborough; but we are not informed to whom, or upon what Occasion he declared his Opinion, and therefore are left at Liberty to doubt, whether his Authority is not produced for a Method which he did not approve, or approved only at some particular Time for some extraordinary Service.

It is urged that he recommended it by his Practice, and that his Success is a sufficient Proof that his Practice was founded upon right Maxims. But if it be remembered what was, in that Time, the Method of obtaining Commissions, and who it was that had the Disposal of them, it will appear not absolutely certain, that his Practice ought to be produced as a decisive Proof of his Opinion.

If the Success of Troops be properly urged as an Argument for the Form of their Establishment, may not the Victories of Prince Eugens afford a Proof, equally convincing, that a few Officers are fusficient? And if the Arguments, which arise from Success are equal on both Sides, ought not the Necessity of saving the Publick Money to turn the Balance?

War, Sir, is in its own Nature a Calamity very grievous to the most powerful and sourishing People, and to a trading Nation is particularly destructive, as it at once exhausts our Wealth, and interrupts our Commerce, at once drinks up the Stream and choaks up the Fountain. In those Countries, whose Affairs are wholly transacted within their own Frontiers, where there is either very little Money, or where their Wealth is dug out of their own Mines, they are only weakened by the Loss of Men, or by the Diminution of their Dominions, and in general can only suffer by being overcome.

But the State of Great Britain is far different, it is not necessary to our Ruin that an Enemy should be stronger than ourselves, that he should be able to pour Armies into our Country, to cover the Sea with Fleets, to burn our Villages by Incursions, or destroy our Fortresses with Bombs; for he that can secure his own Dominions from our Attacks, to which nothing but Distance and some Advantages of Situation are necessary, may support a War against us; and he that can sit out Privateers to interrupt our Trade, may without obtaining a Victory, reduce us to Distress.

Our Situation, Sir, as it preserves us from the Danger of an Invasion except from that powerful Monarch the Pretender, who is indeed always to be dreaded, has likewise the Effect of securing other Nations from being invaded by us, for it is very difficult to transport in one Fleet, and to land at one Time, a Number sufficient to force their Way into a Country where the Ports are fortified, and the Inhabitants in Arms.

Our Wars, Sir, are therefore to be determined by naval Battles, and those Nations have very little to sear from us who have no Trade to be disturbed, and no Navies to be destroyed; if they can only sit out Cruisers which may allways be done by granting Commissions to foreign Adventurers, they may ruin our Merchants by Captures, exhaust the Nation by the Necessity of Convoys, and give heurral Traders an Opportunity of establishing their Credit at those Markets, which have been hitherto supplied by our Manufactures.

This is indeed far from being at present an exact Account of the State of Spain, whole wide extended Dominions are liable to Insults, and from whom many of her most wealthy Provinces may be torn without great Hazard or Difficulty. The particular State of her Commerce, which being only carried on from one Part of her Dominions to another, can only be for a Time interrupted, but is in no Danger of being invaded by any Rival, or lost by Difuse, at least requires our Confideration: And we ought to make War with the utmost Frugality against a People whom no Hostilities can really impoverish, whose Commerce may be said to lie at rest rather than to be shackled, as it will rise into greater Vigour at the End of the War, and whose Treasures, though the Want of them is a present Inconvenience, are only piled up for a Time of Security.

As the only Method, Sir, of reducing this Nation must be that of invading its Colonies, and dismembering its Provinces, by which the chief Persons will be deprived of their Revenues, and a general Discontent be spread over the People, the Forces which are levied for this Expedition, (an Expedition on which the Houour of our Arms and the Prosperity of our Trade must so much necessarily depend,) ought to be selected with the greatest Care, and disciplined with the exactest Regularity.

On this Occasion, therefore, it is surely improper to employ Troops newly collected from Shops and Villages, and yet more irrational to trust them to the Direction of Boys called on this Occasion from the Frolicks of a School, or forced from the Bosoms of their Mothers, and the Sostness of the Nursery. It is not without Compassion, Compassion very far extended, that I consider the unhappy Striplings doom'd to a Camp, from whom the Sun has hitherto been screened, and the Wind excluded; who have been taught by many tender Lectures the Unwholsomeness of the Evening Milts and the Morning Dews, who have been wrapt in Furs in Summer, who have lived without any Fatigue but that of Dress, or any Care but that of their Complexion.

Who can forbear, Sir, some Degree of Sympathy, when he sees Animals like these taking their last Farewel of the Maid that has sed them with Sweet-Meats, and defended them from Insects; when he sees them drest up in the Habiliments of Soldiers, loaded with a Sword, and invested with a Command, not to mount the Guard at the Palace, not to display their Lace at a Review, not to protect Ladies at the Door of an Assembly Room, nor to show their Intrepidity at a Country Fair, but to enter into a kind of Fellowship with the rugged Sailor, to hear the Tumult of a Storm, to sustain the Change of Climates, and to be fet on share in an Euc-my's Dominions ?

Surely, he that can fee fuch Speciacles without Sorrow. must have hardened his Heart beyond the common Degrees of Cruelty, and it may reasonably be expected, that he who can propose any Method by which such Hardships may be escaped, will be thought entituled to Gratitude and Praise,

' For my Part, I should imagine, Sir, that an easy Method might be discovered of obviating such Misery, without lessening that Number of Officers, which perhaps, in Opposition to Reason and Experience, some Gentlemen will continue to think necessary, and I hope that this may be no improper time to declare my Opinion.

· I have observed, that for some time, no private Sentinel has ever risen to any Rank above that of a Serjeant, and that Commissions have been reserved as Rewards for other Services than those of the Camp. This Procedure, I cannot but think at once impolitick and unjust.

' It is impolitick, Sir, as it has a natural Tendency to extinguish in the Soldiery all Emulation and all Industry. Soldiers have an equal Genius with other Men, and undoubted. ly there might be found among them great Numbers capable. of learning and of improving the military Sciences; but they have likewise the same Love of Ease, and the Defire of Hone our and of Profit, and will not condemn themselves to labour without the Prospect of Reward, nor sacrifice their Time to the Attainment of that Knowledge, which can have no other Effect than to make them discover the Stupidity of their Commanders, and render their Obedience more difficult, as it will deftroy that Reverence which is necessary to Subordination.

It is unjust, Sir, because it is not to be doubted, that fome Soldiers by the natural Force of their Faculties, or by a laudable Activity of Mind, have extended their Knowledge beyond the Duties of a private Station, and he that excels in his Profession has an equitable Claim to Distinction and Preferment. To advance any Man in the Army, because his Father is an Orator in Parliament, or the Leading Man of a Borough, seems not more rational, than to make another Man a Judge because some of his Ancestors were skilled in Gunnery; nor would the Lawyers have juster Reasons for Complaint in one Case, than the Soldiers in the other.

It is therefore, Sir, in my Opinion, necessary to the Advancement of military Knowledge, that as a Sentinel is, for excelling in his Profession, advanced to the Degree of a Serjeant, the Serjeant, who continues his Application, and performs his Duty, should, in time, be honoured with a Commission.

It may be objected indeed, that Serjeants, though skilful in Discipline, yet can very seldom arrive at any remarkable Skill in Politicks, and though they should be so fortunate as to gain Estates, could never be of any use at the Representatives of a Borough; and to what Purpose should those Men be advanced, who can only serve their Country, but can contribute very little to the Support of the Court?

This is, I own, Sir, an Objection which I despair of answering to the Satisfaction of those by whom it will be raised. The hardy Serjeant would never cringe gracefully at a Levee, would never attain to any successful Degree of Address in soliciting Votes, and if he thould, by mere Bribery, be deputed hither, would be unable to defend the Conduct of his Di-

In Vindication of the present Scheme, I believe sew of those rugged Warriors would find many Arguments; they would not recommend to the Nation a Troop of Boys, under the Command of Boys, as the most proper Forces to be sent to make Conquests in distant Countries; nor would imagine, that unskilful Soldiers could, under the Direction of Officers equally ignorant with themselves, attain the Knowledge of their Duty in the same Time as if they were incorporated with regular Troops, in which every Man might receive Instruction, and learn his Business from his Comrade.

I had lately, Sir, the Opportunity of hearing the Opinion of one of the greatest Generals in the World, on this Subject, who declared with the utmost Considence of Certainty, that raw Troops could be disciplined in a short Time, only by being incorporated with those that had been already taught their Duty; and afferted, that with an Army so mixed, he should think himself sufficiently enabled to meet any Forces of the same Number, and should not sear to acquit himself fuccessfully, either in attacking or defending.

From not whether any Name can be opposed, that deserves equally to be reverenced. He has had the Honour of defending the Rights of his Country in the Senate, as well as in the Field, has fignalized himself equally in the Debate and in the Battle, and perhaps deserves less Regard for having hazarded his Life, than for having been divested of his Employments.

Officers are by no means necessary to Success in War, since they are dangerous to our Liberty in Time of Peace, since they are certainly expensive, and at best not certainly useful; and since the greatest General of the present Age has declar'd that our new Levies ought to be mingled with our Vol. XIII.

Standing Forces, I shall think it my Duty, to vote against the present Scheme of raising new Regiments, and shall agree to no other Supplies than such as may be sufficient for adding the same Numbers to the present Army.

General Wade.

General Wade then spoke as follows.

Sir.

Though I cannot pretend to pursue the Honourable Gentleman through the whole Compass of his Argument, nor shall attempt to stand up as his Rival, either in Extent of Knowledge, or Elegance of Language; yet as my Course of Life has necessarily surnished me with some Observations relating to the Question before us, and my present Station in the Army, may, in some Measure, be said to make it my Duty to declare my Opinion, I shall lay before the House a sew Considerations, with the artless Simplicity of a plain Soldier, without engaging in a formal Debate, or attempting to overthrow the Arguments of others.

It is observed, Sir, that for the greatest Part, the farther any Man has advanced in Life, the less Confidence he places in Speculation, and the more he learns to rest upon Experience, the only sure Guide in human Affairs; and as the Transactions in which he is engaged are more important, with the greater Anxiety does he inquire after Precedents, and the more timorously does he proceed, when he is obliged to regulate his Conduct by Conjecture or by Deliberation.

. This Remark, Sir, though it may be just with Regard to all States of Life, is yet more constantly and certainly applicable to that of the Soldier; because as his Profession is more hazardous than any other, he must with more Caution guard against Miscarriages and Error. The old Soldier, therefore, very rarely ventures beyond the Verge of Experience, unless in Compliance with particular Accidents, which does not make any Change in his general Scheme, or in Situations, where nothing can preserve him, but some new Stratagem or unprecedented Effort, which are not to be mentioned as Part of his original Plan of Operation, because they are produced always by unforeseen Emergences, and are to be imputed, not to Choice but to Necessity; for in Consequence of my first Principle, an old Soldier never willingly involves himself in Difficulties, or proceeds in such a Manner, as that he may not expect Success by the regular Operations of

It will not therefore be strange, if I, who, having ferved in the Army in the Wars of King William, may justly claim the Title of an old Soldier, should not easily depart from the Methods established in my Youth; Methods by which their Effects have shewn me, that they at least answer the Intention for which they were contrived, and which therefore I shall be asraid of rejecting, less those which are proposed to be substituted in their Place, however probable in Speculation, should be found defective in Practice; and the Reasonings, which indeed I cannot answer, should be consuted in the Field, where Eloquence has very little Power.

The Troops of Great Britain, formed according to the present Establishment, have been found successful; they have preserved the Liberties of Europe, and driven the Armies of France before them; they have appeared equally formidable in Sieges and in Battles, and with Strength equally irrefiftible, have preffed forward in the Field, and mounted the Breach. It may be urged, that this Vigour, Alacrity and Success, cannot be proved to have been produced by the Number of Officers who commanded them; but fince, on the contrary, it cannot be shewn that the Number of Officers did not contribute to their Victories, I think it not prudent to try the Experiment, which, if it should succeed, as it possibly may, would produce no great Advantage; and if it should fail, and that it may fail no Man will deny, must bring upon us, not only the Expence, which we are so solicitous to avoid, but Disgrace and Losses, a long Interruption of our Trade, and the Slaughter of great Numbers of our Fellow-Subjects.

Thus far, Sir, I have proceeded upon a Supposition that the Balance of Argument is equal on both Sides, and that nothing could be alledged on one Part, but Experience, or objected to the other, but the Want of it; but as I am now called to declare my Opinion in a Question relating to my Profession, a Question of great Importance to the Public, I should think that I had not discharged my Duty to my Country with that Fidelity which may justly be expected from me, if I should omit any Observation that my Memory may suggest, by which the House may be better enabled to proceed in this Enquiry.

I think it therefore proper to declare, that we not only, in the last great War, experienced the Usefulness of numerous Officers, but that we have likewise selt the Want of them on a Signal Occasion, and that the only greatest Advantage which our Enemies obtained, was gained over an Army, rendered weak by the Want of the ulual Number of Officers. Such were the Forces that were defeated at the satal Battle of Almanza, by which almost all Spain was recovered from us. And it is, Sir, the Opinion of very skiller.

General Wed, at the Head of two Battalions, repulfed twenty two Squadrons of the Enemy in that Action, being then Colonel of a Regiment.

Commanders, that the Germans, only by having fewer Officers than the French, did not succeed in those long and obilinate Battles of Parma and Guaffalla.

It is indeed natural to imagine, that a greater Number of Officers must promote Success, because Courage is kindled by Example, and it is therefore of use to every Man to have his Leader in his View. Shame at one Time, and Affection at another, may produce the Effects of Courage, where it is wanted, and those may follow their Commander; who are inclined to defert their Duty; for it is feldom known, that, while the Officers appear confident, the Soldiers despair, or that they think of retreating but after the Example of their Leaders.

. Where there are only few Officers, it is apparent, that more is left to Chance, in which it becomes not a wife Man' to place any Confidence; for if the Officers are killed at the Beginning of the Action, the Soldiers must become an useless, defenceless Herd without Order, without Unanimity, and without Defign; but, by the present Method, if an Officer happens to fall, his Place is immediately supplied by another, the Action goes forward, and the Enemy receives no Advantage from Confusion or Delay.

I am therefore of Opinion, that in raising Troops for the Expedition now intended, the established Method ought to be followed, and that we ought not to hazard the Success of our Attempt, by new Regulations, of which no human Attemper on recent Sagacity can foretel the Event.

Tho' it cannot be denied, that some Addition might be made to our Companies without any vifible or certain Inconvenience, yet the Augmentation now intended, is too numerous to be fo incorporated without some Neglect of Difcipline, as the Officers would be charged with more Men than they could properly fuperintend.

· There is indeed, Sir, another Method of Incorporation, by adding new Companies to each Regiment; but of this Method the Advantage would be small, because the Number of Captains and inferiour Officers must be the same, and the Pay of only the Field-Officers would be faved, and this trifling Gain would be far over-balanc'd by the Inconveniencies which Experience has shown to arise from it. There have been Regiments formed of thirteen Companies instead of ten; but it was found, that as the Officers of a Company may be overcharged with Soldiers, fo a Colonel may likewife have more Companies than he can conveniently inspect, and the antient Regulation was reflored, as the least liable to Difficulties and Objections.

Having thus endeavoured to vindicate the Manner in which our new Troops are proposed to be levied, it may be expected that I should now make some Observations on the Service in which they are to be employed, which I cannot think liable to any unanswerable Objection. It is now, Sir, in our Choice whether we will fend the new Regiments abroad or keep them at home; and our Choice may easily be determined by comparing the Value of our Colonies, with That of their Mother Country. If it be not necessary to have any Army here, to defend us against Insults and Invasions, the Question about the Manner of raising or employing new Regiments is superfluous, because none ought to be raised, as our old Troops are sufficiently numerous for foreign Service. But if the Security of the Nation requires an Army, would it not be Madness to send those Troops, to a distant Part of the World, in which we can confide most? Would not those, who speak with such Contempt of an Expedition undertaken by Boys, have a better Reason for the Censure, if only Boys were station'd on our Coasts to repel the Veterans of the French ? Would not such Measures animate our Enemies. and invite an Invation ?

It may perhaps be urged farther, that the Troops which are fent into the West Indies, are more likely to succed in their Design, than any Regiment of antient Establishment. The chief Danger to be seared in that Part of the World, is not from the Enemy but the Climate, with which young Men are most able to contend, though they may not be equally qualified for Attempts, in which Skill is equally necessary with Vigour.

I am convinc'd, Sir, that this War has hitherto been profecuted with Ardour and Fidelity, and that no Measures have been taken but such as Experience and Reason have supported, and therefore affirm, without Scruple, that if we are not successful, our Miscarriages must be imputed to the Chance of War, from which no Prudence can exempt us.

The Lord Quarendon fpoke next to the following Purpole. Ld. Quarendon.

"Having but very lately had the Honour of a Seat in this House, I am conscious how little I am acquainted with either the Subjects or Forms of Debate, and should therefore continue to listen to the Sentiments of Persons more experienced, with filent Veneration, did I not observe with how much Indulgence they are heard who mean well, however deficient in Knowledge, or in Eloquence.

As the honourable Gentleman who spoke last, Sir, professes to have form'd his Opinion rather from Facts than Arguments, I hope I shall be indulged by the House in an Attempe to examine those Facts which he has produced, because I think them not sufficient to support his Positions, which must therefore be citablish'd by some other Proofs, before a Decision of this Question can be fixed by them.

With regard to his Experience, to which undoubtedly no fmall Degree of Veneration is due, he confesses that we have tried only one of the two Forms of Establishment now in Competition, and that therefore, though he has had Reason to approve that with which he is most acquainted, he has no certain Proofs of the Inefficacy or Impersection of the other.

But Experience, Sir, may be extended much farther than our own personal Transactions, and may very justly comprehend those Observations which we have had Opportunities of making upon the Conduct and Success of others. This Gentleman, though he has only commanded in the Armies of Great Britain, has feen the Forces of other Nations, has remarked their Regulations, and heard of their Actions, he has probably acted in Conjunction with our Confederates in the last War, and tho' it is known that they differ from us in the Proportion of Soldiers and Officers, he has mentioned no Disadvantage which might be supposed to arise from their Establishment, and therefore, I suppose, he cannot deny that their Behaviour and Success was the same with that of our Troops.

'The Battles of Almanza, Parma, and Guaffalla, which he has particularly mention'd, were loft, as he informs us, by Armies not officer'd according to the Establishment which he recommends to us; but it is observable that his Argument is defective in an effential Part ; for though he affirms that the Armies which were defeated had fewer Officers than the Enemy, he has neither shown, nor attempted to show, that the Want of Officers occasioned the Defeat, or that the Loss would have been prevented by a greater Number.

These Instances, therefore, can be of no Effect on the Determination of the present Question; for though it is certain that at Almanza, and at other Places, Armies with few Officers, have loft the Battle, it is not less common for those Troops that are more liberally supplied to be overthrown by others which are differently model'd.

With Regard, Sir, to the Troops of Germany, I have heard them praised in many Parts of Europe, as not interior either to those of France, or of any other Nation, and have been informed that their ill Success, both at Parme and Guafialla, may be juttly imputed to other Causes than the want of Officers.

. ' There has, perhaps, Sir, feldom been an Example of Firmness, Discipline and Resolution, beyond that which was shown minutes with our lameral and to pay (147)

by the Germane at the Action of Parma, where they attack'd the Trenches of the French, fullained the Fire of the Ramparts of the City, and though they loft their Commander in Chief and two others, towards the Beginning of the Action, they continued the Fight for eleven Hours, and at last retired only at the Approach of Night.

Trenches, even with Forces inferior in Number, so far were they from any Distinction in the Form of their Establishment; and after a Fight of seven Hours, in which their Loss was, under all Disadvantages, not greater than that of their Enemies, they retreated to their former Camp unmalested and unpursued. The French, Sir, were preserved in both these Battles, not by the Number of their Officers, but by their Situation, by Woods, Cassines, Ditches and Intrenchments,

Nor do I discover, Sir, what can be inferred from his Observation of the Influence of Example in time of Action, but that Officers should be selected with great Care, and not be promoted by Favour, Interest, or Caprice; for an Example of Cowardice in a Leader must be pernicious, in Proportion, as that of Bravery is beneficial; and as, where more Officers are supposed necessary there is less Room for Choice, to it must be allowed that the Troops, which have more Officers than other Forces, are in more Danger of being Infected with Cowardice.

It appears therefore to me, that the Expence of the prefent Ellabsishment is a certain Evil, and that the Advantages are very doubtful; and I think it demonstrable, that the present State of the Nation requires Frugality, and therefore I shall vote for the Incorporation of our new Levies with the old Regiments. By this Incorporation, Sir, our new levied Troops will be no longer dillinguished from our Veterans; they will be equally acquainted with Discipline, and will learn from the Conversation of their Associates, a Spirit of Enterprise, and a Contempt of Danger; we may then employ Forces equally formidable in all Parts of the public Service, and invade the Dominions of our Enemies, without leaving our own Courry desolate.

The Arguments which the honourable Gentleman has offered in Defence of fending our younger Troops to the Weft Indies, which may likewife be used against an Incorporation, is in my Opinion, Sir, far from being conclusive; for it supposes, what will not be granted, that a cold Climate may be changed for a hotter, with more Safety by a young, than an old Man. I have been told on the contrary, that superabundant Heat is the great Discase of Youth, and that the Want of it produces most of the Infirmities of Age; and every one has known the Lives of Persons, languishing with Age, prolong d by a Removal into warm Countries. I am therefore of Opinion, that the honourable Gentleman's Argument in defective in all its Parts, and hope that I shall not be charged with Obstinacy or Perverseness for difference from him.

Mr. Howe.

Mr. Howe + spoke next in Substance as follows and Sir,

'Before I engage in a Discussion of the Question, I cannot but think it necessary to observe, that the honourable Gentleman, who spoke the second in this Debate, has been very far from consulting either Policy or Justice in his Declamation, and that he deviated from the Subject only to ridicule his Country, to exalt our Enemies, and depress our Efforts.

He has described, Sir, the British Youth, the Sons of noble Families, and the Hopes of the Nation, in Terms too contemptuous to be heard without Indignation; he has amused himself with displaying their Ignorance and their Effeminacy, and has indulged his Imagination in a malignant Kind of Gaiety, which, hower it may divert himself, is very far from contributing either to the Reformation or Prevention of those Practices which he censures.

'I believe, Sir, it will be granted, that nothing ought to please but in Proportion to its Propriety and Truth; and if we try the Satire that we have lately heard by this Test, it will be found to have very little Claim to Applause; for our Armies must be composed of the Youth of the Nation: And for my Part, I cannot discover what Advantage we shall gain over the Spaniards by informing them how little our Troops are accustomed to Danger, how short a Time they have been acquainted with Fatigue, how tenderly they have been nursed, how easily they may be frighted, and how certainly they will be conquer'd, if they but meet with Opposition.

Nor, Sir, is such an Account of the Youth of Britein more true, in my Opinion, than it is prudent. I am far from discovering any such remarkable Degeneracy in the Age, or any great Prevalence of Cowardice and unmanly Delicacy in nor do I doubt of hearing, that our Youth, if they are fent upon any Expedition, will show, that the British Courage is not yet extinguished, and that, if they are ranged on the Plains of the West Indies, they will discover themselves the Sons of those that sorced the Pass of Schellenbourg.

That the Degeneracy of the British Youth is, at least, not universal, we have just now, Sir, received an incontestible Proof from the Gentieman who spoke last, and spoke with so much Elegance of Language, and Justices of Reasoning, as shews, that there are to be sound, among the Youth of Great Britain, Persons very well qualified for the Parliament; and [†] Created Lord Chedworth from after the Diffolution of the Parliament.

I have never heard that a Post in the Army required greater

The Pleasure, however, with which I have attended to his Remarks, has not so far prejudic'd me in Favour of his Opinion, as that I shall easily consent to change that Method of Discipline to which our Troops have been accustomed, and of which we know by Experience, that it is at least not less efficacious than that of any other Nation. Customs, if they are not bad, are not to be changed, because it is an Argument in Favour of a Practice that the People have experienc'd it, and approv'd it, and every Change is disagreeable to those who judge only by Prejudice, of whom I need not say how great is the Number.

it only in Pursuit of another.

He has observed, that our Troopers are mounted upon Horses that are of no Use; a Remark, Sir, which I never heard from any other Person, and for which, I believe, no Authority can be produced: They are mounted, indeed, upon Horses very different from those which are used by other Nations, because scarcely any other Country breeds Horses of equal Size and Strength, and therefore, as I am inform'd, the French have purchased Horses from this Island, and I believe that all the Cavalry of Europe would be mounted upon our Horses, if they could procure them. I have been informed, that their Pressure in the Shock of Battle is such as no Forces in the World are able to sustain; and that it was not less by the Strength of our Horses, than the Spirit of our Soldiers, that the Squadrons of France were, in the Battle of Blenbeim, pushed into the Danube.

Nor do I less disapprove his Censure of the Choice which has been made of the Troops intended for the West Indian Service, which, though I ardently desire its Success, I cannot think of equal Importance with the Desence of our own Country, for tho we may be disgraced by a Deseat, we can be endanger'd only by an Invasion; and therefore I think it necessary to retain those Troops on which we may best rely for the Security of this Island, lest our Enemies should take the Advantage of their Absence, and set the Pretender on the Throne.

Sir William Yonge rose next, and spoke to the Effect following: IN DISTRICT OF STREET, STREET, OR STREET, OR ST. Sir, and the second of the sec

Sir Will. Yonge.

' It is a standing Maxim, both in private Life and public Transactions, that no Man can obtain great Advantages, who is afraid of petty Inconveniences; and that he that will hope to obtain his End without Expence, will languish for ever in fruitless Wishes, and have the Mortification of seeing the Adventurous and the Liberal enjoy that Felicity, which though it is within his Reach, he is afraid of feizing.

When the Depredations of the Spaniards became first the Subjects of our Debates, nothing was heard amongst us but Threats of Vengeance, Demands of Reparation, Affertions of Sovereignty, and Resolutions to obtain Security : The Importance of our Commerce, the Necessity of rigorous Meafures, the Danger of Pulllanimity, the Meannels of Negotiation, and the Disadvantages of Delay, were thundered from every Part of the House. Every Man seemed to imagine that there was no Mean between Victory and Ruin, and that not to humble Spain, was to betray our Country to Insulus, Ignominy and Slavery.

' Far was I then, Sir, from suspecting, that when the War, thus vehemently urged, should be declared, that the Prosecution of it would produce any Debates. I doubted not but that every Man would be defirous of fignalizing his. Zeal for the Prosperity of Commerce, by expediting the Supplies, and forwarding the Preparations, and that the only Contention among us would be, who should appear the most ardent Enemy of Spain.

But no fooner are Hostilities begun against this insolent and oppressive Nation, than those who expressed most Resentment at the Prudence and Moderation by which they were delayed, those that accused every Attempt for an Accommodation, of Cowardice, and charged the Ministry with conniving at the Rapine of Pirates, begin to enquire into the Necessity of the Expences occasioned by the War, to harangue on the Advantages of Parlimony, and think it of more Importance to eafe our Taxes, than to subdue our Enemies.

' In pursuance of this new Doctrine they are now endeavouring to embarrals the Measures of his Majelly, that they may fave, according to their own Computation, only Thirty Thousand Pounds, which in reality I can easily shew to be no more than Fifteen Thousand.

. For the Sake of this important Sum our Army is to be modelled by a new Regulation, and the Success of the War is to be impeded, the Security of our Commerce to be hazarded, and our Colonies are to be endanger'd.

· Frugality

othe Whole for the Preservation of a Part.

The Gentlemen, Sir, who have most endeavoured to distinguish themselves as the constant Opponents of the Administration, have charged it, on all Occasions, with giving Encouragement to the Spaniards, but can charge it with nothing so likely to raise the Considence and consirm the Obstinacy of the Enemy, as the Objections which they themfelves have made to the present Scheme of levying Forces; for to how great a Degree of Poverty must they believe that Nation reduced, of which the warmelt Patriots struggle to save a Sum so inconsiderable, by an Experiment of so much Uncertainty? and how easily will the Spaniards promise themfelves, that they shall gain the Victory only by obliging us to continue in a State of War, a State which, by our own Confession, we are not able to support?

' Had any other Argument, Sir, been produced than the Necessity of Parsimony, it had been less dangerous to have agreed to this new Scheme; but to adopt it only for the Sake of sparing Fifteen Thousand Pounds, would be to make ourfelves contemptible, to intimidate our Allies, and to unite all those against us, who are inclined to trample on Misery, and to plunder Weakness.

I am inclin'd to judge so favourably, Sir, of the Intentions of those whom I am now opposing, that I believe they have only used this Argument, because they were able to produce no other, and that if either Reason or Experience had been on their Side, the Poverty of the Nation had not been mention'd.

But the honourable Gentleman, who has been fo long engaged in military Employments, has shewn that all our Success has been obtained by the present Establishment, and that the Battle in which we fuffer'd most, was lost by our unfortunate Deficiency of Officers.

Nor do his Reasons, Sir, however modelly offer'd, de-Serve less Regard than his Experience, for he has shown, that a greater Number of Officers naturally contribute to preferve Discipline, and excite Courage, and it is not necessary that a Man should be much a Soldier to discover, that Discipline and Courage united, must generally prevail.

To the Examples which he has produced in Favour of his Opinion, it has been objected, that Victories equally wonderful have been gained with fewer Officers, and, by the Honographe Gentleman that spoke the second on this Occafion, the Actions of Eugene were opposed to those of the Duke wife Blink, for an Mile mil U ayeod y of Marlborough.

That Victories have been gained by Troops differently regulated, I cannot deny : Victories have likewise been gained Sir, under every Circumstance of Ditadvantage : Victories have been gained by inferior Numbers, and by raw Troops, over veteran Armies, yet no prudent General ever produc'd these Inflances as Arguments against the Usefulness of Discipline, or as Proofs that Superiority of Numbers, was no Advantage.

The Success of Prince Eugene in the late War, was far from convincing the British General that the German Establish ment was preferable to our own; for he required that the Hessian Troops, which were paid by Great Britain, should be officer'd like our national Troops. In this he could be influenced only by his own Opinion; for he neither nominated their Officers, nor could advance his Interest at home by creating new Posts to which he did not recommend; he could therefore only regard the Success of the War, and changed their Model only because he thought it defective.

* The Germans themselves, Sir, are far from imagining that their Armies might not be made more formidable by ap-1 proaching nearer to the British Methods; for one of their Officers, a Man of great Reputation and Experience has informed me, that they were convinced of their Defect, and that nothing hindered them from adding more Officers, but the Fear of Expences, that they imputed all their Defeats to the Necessity of Parlimony, that their Men wanted not Courage but Leaders, and that their Enemies gained Advantages merely by the Superiority of their Purses.

In the late War it was common for the auxiliary Troops, when they were fent upon any Expedition of Importance, to be supplied with Officers either from their other Regiments, or by the British Forces; so necessary did the Duke of Marlborough think a larger Number of Officers in time of Action, that where he could not alter the Establish ment, he deviated from the common Methods of War, and transferred his Officers occasionally into Troops over which they had no fettled Authority.

It is therefore most evident, Sir, that the Model on which our Troops are formed, was, by this great Commander, preferr'd to that which is now so warmly recommended, and I know not why we should recede from his Practice, if we are defirous of his Success.

Nor can I discover, Sir, any better Method of selecting Officers than that which has of late been followed, however some may censure or ridicule it. To advance Gentlemen to Command feems to be the most likely way to unite Authority with Rank, for no Man willingly obeys those to whom he has lately seen himself equal, or whose Conduct in lower Stations, he has perhaps had Opportunities of examining too nearly.

The Distinction of Birth, however chimerical in itself, has been so long admitted, and so universally received, that it is generally imagined to confer on one Man an indelible and evident Superiority over another, a Superiority, which those who would easily imagine themselves equal in Merit cannot deny, and which they allow more willingly, because tho' it be an Advantage to possess it, to want it cannot be justly confidered as a Reproach.

For this Reason, Sir, Men chearfully obey those to whom their Birth seems to have subjected them, without any scrupulous Enquiries into their Virtues or Abilities; they have been taught, from their Childhood, to consider them as placed in a higher Rank than themselves, and are therefore not disgusted at any transient Bursts of Impatience, or sudden Starts of Caprice, which would produce at least Resentment, and perhaps Mutiny, in Men newly exalted from a low Station. The more attentively, Sir, we look upon the World, the more strongly shall we be convinced of the Truth of these Affections, and the more evidently shall we discover the Instuence which operates, in a Degree scarcely credible, even to those who have experienced its Power, and which is indeed one of the chief Means of Subordination, by which Society is held together.

Nor are Officers of Birth, Sir, to be preferred to Men who are recommended by nothing but military Service, only because they are more chearfully obeyed, but for another Reason of equal Importance. It has been observed, that, in reality, they discharge the Duty of Commanders in a Manner more likely to preserve Dignity and encrease Reverence; that they discover, on all Occasions, a Sense of Honour and Dread of Disgrace, which are not easily to be found in a Mind contracted by a mean Education, and depressed by long Habits of Subjection.

It is not indeed, Sir, universally and unvariably certain, that a Man raised from Meanness and Poverty, will be insolent and oppressive; nor do I doubt but there are many now languishing in Obscurity, whose Abilities might add new Lustre to the highest Honours, and whose Integrity would very faithfully discharge the most important Trust; and in their Favour, where ever they can be discovered, some Exceptions ought to be made; but as general Rules are generally to be followed, as well in military Regulations as other Transactions, it will be found upon the exactest Enquiry by no Means Means improper to advance Gentlemen to Posts of Command. rather than private Sentinels, however skilful or courageous, It is to be confidered, Sir, that the present State of the Continent has for many Years made it necessary to support an Army even when we are not engaged in an actual War; that this Army, tho' of late it has, for the Ease of the People, been fometimes encamped during the Summer, is for the greatest Part quartered in Towns, and mingled with the rest of the Community, but governed at the same time by the Officers, and subject to the martial Law. It has often been obferved by those who have argued against standing Forces, that this Difference of Government, makes different Societies, which do not combine in the same Interest, nor much favour one another; and it is indeed certain that Feuds are fometimes produced, that when any private Quarrel happens either by Drunkenness, or Accident, or Claims really disputable, between a Soldier and any other Person, each applies for Support and Affishance to those in the same Condition with himself; the Cause becomes general, and the Soldiers and Townsmen are not easily restrained from Blows and Bloodthed.

It is true likewise that the Rhetoric of the Patriots has been so efficacious, that their Arguments have been so chamorously echo'd, and their Weekly Productions so diligently dispersed, that a great Part of the Nation, as Men always willingly admit what will produce immediate Ease or Advantage, believe the Army to be an useless Burthen imposed upon the People for the Support of the Ministry; that the Landlord therefore looks upon the Soldier as an Intruder forced into his House, and rioting in Sloth at his Expence; and the Farmer and Manusacturer, have learned to call the Army the Vermine of the Land, the Caterpillers of the Nation, the Devourers of other Mens Industry, the Enemies of Liberty, and the Slaves of the Court.

'It is not to be supposed, Sir, that the Soldiers entertain the same Ideas of their Profession, or that they do not conceive themselves injured by such Representations: They undoubtedly consider themselves as the Bulwark of their Country, as Men selected for the Desence of the rest of their Community, as those who have engaged at the Hazard of their Lives to repel Invasion and repress Rebellion, and who contribute more than their Part to the general Felicity, by securing Property and preventing Danger.

It is not to be doubted, Sir, but Sentiments so widely different, must produce an equal Contrariety of Claims, and Diversity of Conduct; the Trader imagines, that the Man who subsides upon the Taxes which are raised only from his

Labour, ought to confider himself as his Inferior at least, if not as his Hireling and his Servant; the Soldier wonders how he can ever conceive himself sufficiently grateful to him that has devoted his Life to his Defence, and to whom he must fly for Protection whenever Danger shall approach him, and coucludes that he has an incontestable Right to the better Part of that, of which the Preservation of the whole depends upon

Thus does Self-love magnify every Man in his own Eves. and so differently will Men determine when each is to judge in his own Cause. Which of these Competitors thinks most justly of his own Station and Character, or whether both are not mistaken in their Opinion, I think it by no means necessary to decide. This at least is evident, that to preserve Peace and Harmony, between two Bodies of Men obliged to live together with Sentiments fo opposite, there is required an uncommon Degree of Prudence, Moderation, and Knowledge of Mankind, which is chiefly to be exerted on the Part of the Soldiers, because they are subject to more rigorous Command, and are more eafily governed by the Authority of their Superiors.

Let us suppose any Dispute of this Kind, Sir, to happen where the Soldiers were commanded only by private Sentinels. disguised in the Dress of Officers, but retaining, what it cannot be expected that they should suddenly be able to lay aside. the Prejudices which they had imbibed in the Ranks, and all the Ardour of trifling Competition in which their Station had once engaged them. What could be expected from their Councils and Direction? Can it be imagined that they would enquire impartially into the original Cause of the Dispute. that they would attend equally to the Parties, endeavour by Mildness and Candour to soften the Malevolence of each, and terminate the Dispute by some addressful Expedient, or decent Accommodation? He furely must be very little acquainted with the vulgar Notions of Bravery and Honour, that could form any Hopes of such Conduct.

. The plain Soldier, Sir, has not accustomed himself to regulate his Motions by Reason, nor has learned any more of Honour, than that it confuls in adhering invariably to his Pretenfions, even though he should discover that they are false. and in refenting Affronts with the utmost Rigour, even when they were provoked by himfelf; he is taught, that it is his Bufinels to conquer in whatever Caule, and, that to delift from any of his Attempts, or retract any of his Affertions, is un-

. Warm with such Notions as these, Sir, would such Officers, as have been recommended by the honourable Gentleman, apply themselves to the Termination of Differences, without any Knowledge of the Laws of Society, without any settled Ideas of the different Rights of different Persons; they would have nothing in View but the Honour of their Profession, nor endeavour to support it by any other Method than that of Violence. If a Soldier was affronted by a Farmer, they would probably lay his Territories waste, and ravage his Plantations like an Enemy's Country; if another disagreed with his Landlord, they would advise him to make good his Quarters, to invade the Magazines of Provision without Restraint, to force the Barricadoes of the Cellar, and to forage in the Stables without Controul.

But Gentlemen, Sir, are proper Judges of Debates between the Army and the rest of the Community, because they are equally related to both Parties, as Men who posses or expect Estates, or who are allied to those whose Instunce arises from their Property. As Men bred in Assume and Freedom, and acquainted with the Blessings of our Constitution, and the Necessity of civil Government, they cannot willingly contribute to the Increase of the military Power, and as Members of the Army they cannot but be desirous to support their own Rank, and to hinder their Profession from sinking into Constempt; it is therefore their Care to repress Insolence on one Part, and to prevent Oppression on the other, to stop Dissentions in their Beginning, and reconcile all the different Presentations of the People and Soldiers.

I am indeed furprized, Sir, to hear the Promotion of Serjeants recommended by the honourable Gentleman, who has so often strained his Lungs, and exhausted his Invention, to explain how much our Constitution is endangered by the Army; how readily those Men will concur in the Abolition of Property who have nothing to lose, and how easily they may be perswaded to destroy the Liberties of their Country, who are already cut off from the Enjoyment of them; who, therefore can only behold with Envy and Malevolence those Advantages which they cannot hope to possess, and which produce in them no other Effects than a quicker Sense of their own Mifery.

"Upon what Principles, Sir, any Gentleman can form those Notions, or with what View he can so long and so stadiously disperse them, it is his Province to explain, for the only Reason that can be offered by any other Person for his incessant Declamations, the Desire of securing his Country from the Oppression of a standing Army, is now for ever overthrown by this new Proposal; which, if it were to be received, would in a very sew Years produce an Army proper to be employed in the Execution of the most detestable Desired.

figus, an Army that could be of no other Use than to gratify an ambitious Prince or a wicked Ministry, as it would be commanded, not by Men who had lost their Liberty, but by Men who never enjoyed it? by Men who would abolish our Constitution without knowing that they were engaged in any criminal Undertaking, who have no other Sense of the Enjoyment of Authority than that it is the Power of acting without Controul; who have no Knowledge of any other Lawa than the Commands of their Superiors.

To Men like these, Sir, to Men raised up from Poverty and Servility to Rank and Power, to Ignorance invested with Command, and to Meanness elated with Preferment, would any real Patriot, any zealous Affertor of Liberty, any inflexible Enemy to the Corruptions of the Ministry, consign the Protection of his Country, and intrust to these our Happiness, one Properties and our Lives?

Whether the honourable Gentleman has changed any of the Sentiments which he has hitherto appeared to admit with regard to the Army; whether this new Determination is only an Inflance of that Inconfishency which is scarcely to be avoided in the Vindication of a bad Cause; or whether he was betrayed to it only by his Hatred of the Administration, which would prompt him to recant his own Advice, if it should happen to be approved. I will not pretend to determine: But I must lament on this Occasion the Entertainment which the House will lose, by the eternal Cessation of any Harrangues on the Army, since he cannot now declaim on either Part without contradicting his former Declarations.

Nor will the honourable Gentleman find less Difficulty in proving, that Justice rather than Policy requires the Promotion of Serjeants to Commissions. Military Preferments are always at the Disposal of the Crown; nor can any Right be pretended to them but such as arises from the Cultom which has been generally followed in conferring them, which is not only variable at Pleafure, but has never been at any Time regularly observed. The Order of Rotation has been fuffered sometimes to proceed, because of two Persons otherwife equal, he that has ferved longest may plead the most Merit; but the Plea of Service has been always over-ruled by Birth or powerful Recommendation. And tho', Sir, it is natural for Men disappointed to complain, yet as those Officers, whose Preferment has been delayed, were not thought in reality to have received any Injury, their Murmurs have been the less regarded.

It might be expected, Sir, from a Patriot, a Lamenter of the Degeneracy of Mankind, and an inflexible Opponent of Corruption, that he should consider rather Facts than Persons; that he should regulate his Decision by the invariable Principles of Reason and Justice, and that therefore he should not applaud at one Time what he condemns at another.

But this Gentleman seems to have established some new Maxims of Conduct, and perhaps upon new Notions of Morality; for he feems to imagine, that his Friends may feize as their Right, what his Adversaries cannot touch without Robbery, though the Claim of both be the same.

' It is well known, Sir, to the whole Army, that a noble Person whose Abilities are so loudly celebrated, whose Virtues are so liberally praised, and whose Removal from his military Employments is so solemnly lamented as a publick Calamity, obtain'd his first Preferments by Pretensions very different from military Merit; and that at the Age only of Seventeen, a Time of Life in which, whatever might be his Abilities, very little Prudence or Experience could be expected, he was advanced to the Command of a Regiment, and exalted above many Officers whole known Bravery and frequent Hazard entitled them to Favour.

' I do not affert that he was undefervedly promoted, or condemn those who either solicited or granted his Commisfion. I maintain only that what was then reasonable and just, is not now either iniquitous or ridiculous, and different Perfons in the fame Circumstances have a Right to the same Treatment.

In the Reign of Queen Anne, a Reign, Sir, which every Briton recollects with so much Satisfaction, and which will for ever afford Examples of the wifest Councils, and most fuccessful Wars, when new Regiments were to be raised it was far from being thought necessary to observe this Gentleman's favourite Method of Rotation; Posts were filled, not with the Officers of other Regiments, that Room might be left for the Promotion of Serjeants, but with Gentlemen who had never feen a Battle, or learned any Part of the military Discipline.

But tho', Sir, the Regulation of our Army be thus violently attacked, the greatest Crime of the Ministry is, in this Gentleman's Opinion, that of levying new Troops, when we have no Employment for our Standing Forces; of laying unnecessary Impositions upon the Nation, and alarming them with the Fears of an Invalion, only that the Army might be encreased.

' On this Head, Sir, a Declaration of the Duke of Marlborough has been produced, with a great Pomp of Circumflances, and fuch a feeming Accuracy of Narration, that the Attention of the Houle was engaged, and the Account was receiv'd with all the Solemnity of universal Silence, and with the Veneration due to so high an Authority in a Question of fo much Importance.

'The Subject is indeed so worthy of Regard, that I thinks Sir, every Man ought to contribute to the clearing it up; and therefore I take the Liberty of adding to the Honourable Gentleman's Relation, what I hope will be heard wirk equal Curiosity, the Method by which that great Commander proposed to put a Stop to an Invasion with so small a Number.

He was very far, Sir, from imagining that he should be able to repel them by open Force; he was far from being so consident of his Superiority in military Skill, as to imagine that he should defeat them by Stratagem; and therefore he designed, by burning the Villages and destroying the Country, to deprive them of the Means of Subsistence, and harrass them with Famine; to hover at a Distance, and cut off those Parties which Necessity should force out to forage, till a Body of Troops could be assembled sufficient to overthrow them in

2 Battle, or to drive them back to their Ships.

Such was the Scheme, Sir, as I have been inform'd, of this great Man, nor perhaps, can any other be struck out by human Abilities, where greater Numbers are to be oppos'd by smaller. But this Scheme, though preferable, in the last Extremities, to Slavery, is such as cannot be mention'd without Horror, and of which the Execution ought to be avoided by every Expedient that can be practis'd without the Danger of our Liberties. We ought certainly not to reject a nauseous Medicine, by which that Health is preserv'd, which, if lost, can only be restor'd by the Amputation of a Limb.

As it was therefore necessary, Sir, to secure our Coass from an Invasion, it was necessary to raise new Troops for the West-India Expedition; nor did this Method produce any Delay, for the Regiments were compleated a long Time before the Ships of War, and the Transports were ready to convoy and receive them, nor could the utmost Ardour and Diligence dispatch them sooner from our Coasts.

'The Ships, Sir, were by the Violence of a Frost, scarcely exampled, retain'd for a long Time in the Harbours, without a Possibility of being put to Sea; when they were all assembled at the Place appointed for their Conjunction, they waited for a Wind; all the Delay that can be objected, was produc'd by the Seasons, of which the Regulation was

But the Time, Sir, which was unwillingly fpent in the Camp. was not however lost or misemploy'd, for the Troops were, by the Order of the General, every Day exercis'd, and instructed in the Art of War, so that what was lost in Time, was more than recompens'd by the Advantage of better Discipline.

Nor did these Troops appear an Herd so ignorant and contemptible, as they have been represented by malicious Investives and ludicrous Descriptions; there were not indeed among them many grey headed Warriors, nor were their former Campaigns and past Exploits, the Subjects of their Conversation; but there was not one amongst them who did not appear ready to suffer, in the Cause of his Country, all that the most harden'd Veteran could undergo, or whose Alacrity and Eagerness did not promise Perseverance in the March, and Intrepidity in the Battle.

Their General, Sir, who faw them pursue their Exercises, declar'd how much he was satisfied with their Proficiency, applauded their Appearance, and express'd his Considence in their Courage; nor do I doubt, but our Enemies will find, that it is not necessary to send out our most formidable Forces to humble them, and that the Youth of Great-Britain will compensate their Want of Experience by their Courage.

If I, Sir, have been drawn aside from the present Question, it is by following, perhaps, with an Exactness too scrupulous, the Hon Gentleman, whose Propositions I have now shewn to be erroneous, and whose Reproaches will. I believe, now appear rather the Effects of Disappointment than of Zeal; and therefore I think it now necessary to return to the Business before us, the Consideration of the present Establishment, from which, as it was approved by the Duke of Marlborough, and has been defended with very strong Arguments by one of the most experienced Officers of the present Age, I cannot think it safe or prudent to depart.

Mr Greenville spoke next to the following Effect :

Mr Greenville.

As a noble Person has been frequently hinted at in this Debate, to whom my Relation is well known, and whom, as I know him well, I have the firongest Motives to reverence and honour, I cannot forbear to give, on this Occasion, an Attestation which he will be allowed to deserve by all those whom Interest has not blinded, and Corruption deprayed.

It will be allowed, Sir, that he is one of those who are indebted for their Honours only to Merit, one whom the Marice of a Court cannot debase, as its Favour cannot exsit; he is one of those whose Loss of Employments can be a Reproach only to those who take them from him, as he cannot forfeit them but by performing his Duty, and can only give Offence by steady Integrity, and a Resolution to speak as he thinks, and to act as his Conscience dictates.

There are, Sir, Men I know, to whom this Panegyric will feem romantic and chimerical, Men to whom Integrity and Conscience are idle Sounds. Men who are content to catch the Word of their Leader, who have no Sense of the Obligation of any Law but the supreme Will of him that pays them, and who know not any Virtue but Diligence in Attendance, and Readiness in Obedience.

It is furely, Sir, no Loss to the noble Person to be debarred from any Fellowship with Men like these. Nothing can be more unpleasing to Virtue than such a Situation as lays it under a Necessity of beholding Wickedness that cannot be reformed; as the Sight of a Pest-house must raise Horror, though we should suppose the Spectator secure from the Contagion.

Then Mr Ord flood up and spoke as follows:

As I cannot approve the Scheme now propos'd for augmenting our Forces, I shall endeavour to shew why the Ar- Mr Ord, guments, by which it has hitherto been supported, have failed to convince me, and shall lay before the House some Reafons against it, to which I shall expect an Answer, before I shall think that I can agree to it, without squandering the Money which my Constituents have intrusted me with the Disposal of.

The Argument, Sir, with which this Motion was introduc'd, which is indeed the strongest that has yet been offer'd, was, that this Estimate is less expensive than one that was laid before the House in a late Reign, and that therefore it could not reasonably be charged with Extravagance.

' Let us now confider this Argument with that Care which is required by the Importance of the Question; let us inquire what Consequences will follow from it, and to what previous Suppositions it must owe its Force.

The Argument, Sir, evidently supposes that the Estimate in the Reign of King William, was drawn up without any Intention to deceive the House, or to raise Money for Purposes different from those, for which it was really expended. But if we suppose that Estimate to be fraudulently calculated, this may contain the same Fallacies in a lower Degree, and the only Merit that can be claim'd by the Authors of it, will be, that they are not the most rapacious Plunderers of their Country; and that however they may be charged with Profusion of public Money, they are yet more modest than some of their Predecessors.

But it is known, Sir, that in the Reign of King William, very few Estimates were honestly computed; it is 712/5

known that the Rotation of Parties, and Eluctuation of Meatures, reduc'd the Ministry to subsist upon Artifices; to amuse the Parliament with exorbitant Demands, only that they might obtain the necessary Grants, and to pretend Expences which never were incurr'd, that the Supplies which the public Affairs really required, might not be withheld; as fraudulent Tradesmen fix immoderate Prices, that the Buyer may make Offers proportionate to their Demands.

Authority, though they might sometimes pass the House without Censure; for it is to be considered, that by the Frequency of new Elections, the greatest Part of the Members were often unacquainted with the State of publick Accounts, and that an Army was so little known to this Kingdom, that the true Expence of it might easily be concealed.

'Nor is this, Sir, the only Fallacy of this Argument; for it supposes likewise, that the Nation is no less wealthy than in the Time when that Computation was offered, with which this is so triumphantly compared. For every Man know that publick as well as private Expences are to be proportioned to the Revenue by which they are supplied, and that the Charges which are easily supported at one Time, may threaten Ruin at another.

A But unhappily. Sir, it is evident, that, fince the Days of that King, the Nation has been exhausted by a long and wasteful War, and fince, by a Peace equally destructive s it is embarassed with an enormous Debt, and intangled in Treaties, of which the Support may call every Day for new Expences; it has suffered fince that Time a thousand Losses, but gained no Advantage, and yet the Expences of that Time are mentioned as an Example to be compared with those which are proposed in this.

The Difference of the Condition of the British Nation at those two Periods of Time, Sir, is not less than that of the Strength of the same Man in the Vigour of Youth, and the Frigidity of old Age, in the Flush of Health and the Languer of Disease, of the same Man newly risen from Rest and Pienty,

eriminal Infensibility of the public Misery, if it may not be charged with greater Malignity. I know not whether those who shall hear of this Debate, may not impute such Research one rather to Cruelty than Negligence, and imagine that those who squander the Treasure of the Nation, take Pleasure in reproaching that Poverty which their Counsels produce, and indulge their own Vanity by contemplating the Calamities from which they are themselves secure, and to which they are indebted indebted for Opportunities of increasing their own Fortunes, and gratifying their Ambition. It is evident, that an Estimate which requires less than that which has been mentioned, may yet exact more than the Nation can now raise, without feeling too great Inconveniences to be compensated by the Advantages which can be expected from our new Forces. Nor is it sufficient that it is lower than those of former Times; for as it ought to be the Care of the Government to preserve the Ease and Happiness of the People, it should be reduced in Proportion to the Diminution of the national Wealth.

The Right honourable Gentleman confesses, Sir, that Frugality is a Virtue, and his Argument supposes, that to contract Expences is an Argument of prudent Measures; why then is he asraid of carrying Virtue to a greater Height, of making the Burthen still more light, and preferring the cheapest Estimate that can be proposed, when it is afferted by those whose Authority is most worthy of Regard, that it will produce no Weakness in our Troops, nor give our Enemies any Superiority?

I do not pretend any other Skill in military Affairs, than may be gained by casual Conversation with Soldiers, and by a cursory Observation of daily Occurrences; but I speak with greater Confidence on this Occasion, because I do not think any other Qualifications necessary for the Determination of this Question, than a Habit of just Reasoning and Freedom from the Prejudices of Interest.

Every Man knows, Sir, without a military Education, that it is imprudent to purchase any thing at a greater Price which may be procured at a less; and that when the same Sum will buy two Things, of which one is evidently preserable to the other, the best ought to be chosen.

If the Application of either of these two Positions will decide this Controversy, there will be no need of recurring to Experience, of citing the Authority of soreign-Commanders, of comparing the Actions of the Germans and British Generals, or of enquiring how Battles have been lost, or to what Causes Victories are to be ascribed.

It is evident, Sir, that the Scheme now proposed, is twice as costly as that which is recommended in Opposition to it; and therefore unless it will produce twice the Advantage, it must be acknowledged to be imprudently chosen. The Advantage in War is to be rated by comparing the Strength of different Numbers in different Circumstances, and enquiring what Degree of Superiority will be found.

"If we suppose, Sir, two Bodies of Men equally armed and disciplined opposed to each other without any Advantage of Situation, we must conceive that neither Party could be conquered, that the Balance of the Day must remain equal, and the Contest would continue undecided.

It cannot be objected to this Supposition, Sir, that no such Event is recorded in History, because in War many Causes really act which cannot be estimated; one Army may consist of Soldiers more courageous, and more consident in the Justice of their Cause, unforseen Accidents may operate, Orders may be mistaken, or Leaders may be misinformed; but all these Considerations are to be set aside in Speculation, because they may equally be alledged on either Part.

Two Bodies of Men, Sir, equally numerous, being therefore supposed equal, it is to be enquired how either may be superior to the other. It is proposed on one Part to produce this Effect by doubling the Number of Officers rather than increasing that of the Soldiers; and the other, to double the Soldiers under the same Officers, the Expence being the same of both Methods.

When two Armies modelled according to these different Schemes enter the Field, what Event can be expected? Either five Thousand Men with a double Number of Officers, mult be equal to ten Thousand differently regulated, or the Public has paid more for Assistance of the Officers than its real Value, and has chosen of two Methods equally expensive that which is least efficacious.

This, Sir, is the State of the Question now before us, our present Desiciency is not of Men but Money, and we may procure ten Thousand Men regulated like the foreign Troops, at the same Expense as five Thousand in the Form proposed; but I am afraid that no Man will be sound to affert, that the Addition of Officers will be equivalent to a double Number of Soldiers.

Thus it is evident, Sir, evident to Demonstration, that the most expensive Method is at the same time the least advantagious, and that the Proposal of new Regiments is intended to augment the Strength of the Ministry rather than of the Army.

If we suppose, Sir, what is more than any Foreigner will grant, that the additional Officers raise a Body of five Thousand Men to an Equality with six Thousand, is not the Pay of four Thousand Men apparently thrown away? and do not the Officers receive a Reward which their Service cannot deserve? Would it not be far more rational to raise seven Thousand, by which our Army would be stronger by a seventh Part, and as the Pay of three Thousand would be saved, the Publick would be richer by almost a Third.

Surely, Sir, numerical Arguments cannot but deferve fome Confideration, even from those who have learned by long Practice to explain away mere Probability at Pleasure, to select the Circumstances of complicated Questions, and only to shew those which may be produced in Favour of their own for Fallacy, nor do I see what remains to the Decision of it, but that those Gentlemen, who have been acquainted with military Operations, should inform us, what Degree of Superiority is conferred by any assignable Number of Officers; that we may compare their Service with the Price, and discover whether the same Money will not purchase greater Advantages.

The Experience of the late War may evince, Sir, that those Troops which have the greatest Number of Officers are not always victorious; for our Establishment never admitted the same, or nearly the same Number with that of the French, our Enemies; nevertheless we still boast of our Victories; nor is it certain that we might not have been equally successful, tho' the Number of our Officers had been yet less.

Vol. XIII.

Foreigners, Sir, are very far from discovering the Defect of their own Establishment, or imagining that they should become more formidable by imitating our Methods. When I travelled, I took Opportunities of conversing with the Generals of those Nations which are most famous for the Valour of their Troops, and was informed by them, that they thought a Multitude of Officers by no Means useful, and that they were so far from desiring to see their own Regulation changed, that they should make no Scruple of recommending it to other Nations, who in their Opinion, squandered their Treasure upon useless Commissions, and increased the Calamities of War by unnecessary Burthers.

I hope no Man will think it sufficient to reply to these Arguments with general Assertions, or will deny the Necessity of Frugality, and extol the Opulence of the Nation, the Extent of our Commerce, and the Happiness of our Condition. Such indeed, Sir, is the Method of Argumentation made use of by the Hireling Scriblers of the Court, who, because they seel none of the publick Calamities, represent all Complaints as criminal Murmurs, and charge those with Sedition who petition only for Relief. Wretches like these would celebrate our Victories, though our Country should be over-rue by an Invader, would praise the Lenity of any Government by which themselves should be spared, and would boast of the Happiness of Plenty, when half the People should be languishing with Famine.

I do not suppose, Sir, that the despicable Sophistry of Prostitutes like these has any Effect here, nor should I have thought them worthy of the least Notice, had it not been proper to enquire, whether those may not be justly suspected of some Inclination to deceive, even in this House, by whom the most profligate of Mankind are openly paid for the Promulgation of Falshood, and the Patronage of Corruption.

'It is indeed, Sir, artful, in those who are daily impairing our Honour and Influence, to endeavour to conceal from the People their own Weakness, that Weakness which is so well known in foreign Countries, that every Nation is encouraged to insult us; and by which it may reasonably be imagin'd that new Enemies will, in a short Time, be raised.

The late Changes in our military Regulations have indeed taken away all the Terror of our Arms; those Troops are now no longer dreaded, by which the Liberties of Europe were recover'd, and the French reduced to abandon their Schemes of universal Empire, for the Desence of their own Country, because the Officers by whom they were formerly conducted to Glory and to Victory, are now dismissed, and Men advanced to their Posts, who are neither feared nor known.

When the Duke of Argyle was lately deprived of his Command, the Spaniards could not conceal their Satisfaction; they bestowed, however unwillingly, the highest Panegyric upon his Bravery and Conduct, by shewing that he was the only Briton of whom they were afraid. Nor did their Allies the French discover less Exultation; for by them it was declared, that the Nation was now disarmed, that either no War was intended, or that none could be successfully prosecuted, since, as they made no Scruple to affert, though I know not whether I ought to repeat it, we have no other Man capable of commanding Armies, or conducting any great Design.

I am informed that this illustrious Warrior, whose Abilities are sufficiently attested by those Enemies that have selt their Prevalence, is of Opinion, that the Number of Officers now required is not necessary, and has declared that he should with equal Considence undertake either Invasion or Desence, with Forces modelled after the German Costom. And since I have shown that unless the Troops so regulated are equivalent to a double Number added to the standing Regiments, Part of the Expence of the Officers is evidently squandered, I shall vote against the Motion, unless it be proved, which I believe will not be attempted, that the Force of a Regiment is doubled by doubling the Officers.

General Wade spoke next to the following Effect:

Sir,
The learned Gentleman who spoke last, must be ac-General Wade, knowledged to have discovered a very specious Method of Reasoning, and to have carried his Enquiry as far as Speculation without Experience can hope to proceed, but has in my Opinion admitted a false Principle, by which all his Argument has been perplexed.

He supposes that the Advantages must be always in Proportion to the Money expended in procuring them, and that therefore if five thousand Men, raised at any given Cost will be equal to ten Thousand, they ought, if they are regulated according to an Establishment of double the Charge, to be able to encounter ten Thousand.

But in this Supposition, Sir, he forgets, that the Possit bility of Loss is to be thrown into the Balance against the Advantage of the Expence saved; and that tho' the Strength of the Troops be not encreased in Proportion to the Encrease of the Cost, yet the additional Security against a great Loss may justly entitle the most expensive Regulation to the Preference.

Suppose five Thousand Men to be brought into the Field against fix Thousand, if they can by multiplying their Officers at a double Expence be enabled to engage successfully a Body superior in Number by only a fixth Part, the Nation may be justly said to gain all that would have been lost by suffering a Defeat.

That we ought not to chuse a worse Method when we can discover a better, is indisputably true, but which Method is worse or better, can be discovered only by Experience. The last War has taught us, that our Troops in their present Establishment are superior to the Forces of France, but how much they might suffer by any Alteration it is not possible to foresee.

'Success is gained by Courage, and Courage is produced by an Opinion of Superiority; and it may easily be imagined, that our Soldiers, who judge of their own Strength only by Experience, imagine their own Establishment and Discipline advanced to the highest Persection; nor would they expect any other Consequences from an Alteration of it, but Weakness and Deseats. It is therefore dangerous to change the Model of our Forces, because it is dangerous to depress the Spirit of our Soldiers.

That

Tho' it is confessed, Sir, that the French, whose Officers are still more numerous, have been conques'd by our Troops, it must be likewise alledged, that they had yielded us far easier Victories had their Officers been wanting; for to them are they indebted for their Conquests wherever they have been successful, and for their Resistance wherever they have been with Difficulty defeated; their Soldiers are a spiritless Herd, and were they not invigorated by the Bxample of their Leaders, and restrained by the Fear of instant Ponishment, would sly at the Approach of any Enemy, without waiting for the Attack.

I cannot therefore, Sir, but be of Opinion, that the Necessity of a large Number of Officers may be learned even from the Behaviour of those Troops which have been unsuccessful; since it is certain, that the they have been often overcome, they have generally resisted with great Steadines, and retired with great Order.

If those who are only speculative Warriors shall imagine that their Arguments are not consuted, I can only repeat what I declared when I first attempted to deliver my Sentiments in this Debate, that I do not pretend to be very skilful in the Arts of Disputation. I, who claim no other Title than that of an old Soldier, cannot hope to prevail much by my Orastory; it is enough for me that I am consident of consucing those Arguments in the Field, which I oppose in Parliament.

Henry Fox, Esq; spoke next to the following Effect.

Mr Henry Fox.

I am far from thinking that this Question has been hitherto fully explained by thole who have either consider'd it only as a Dispute about Money, or a Question merely speculative concerning the Proportions between different Degrees of Expence, and Probability of Success. In a War of this Kind Expence is the last and lowest Consideration, and where Experience may be consulted, the Conjectures of Speculation ought to have no Weight.

• The Method, Sir, by which our Troops have hitherto been regulated, is well known to have produced Success beyond our Expectations, to have exalted us to the Arbitration of the World, to have reduced the French to change their Threats of forcing a Monarch upon us into Petitions for Peace, and to have established the Liberties of almost every Nation of the World that can call itself free.

Whether this Method, Sir, so successful, so easy, and so formidable, shall be changed; whether it shall be changed at a Time when the whole Continent is in Commotion, and every Nation calling Soldiers to its Standard; when the French.

French, recover'd from their Deseats, seem to have forgotten the Force of that Hand that crushed them in the Pride of Victory; when they seem to be reviving their former Designs, and rekindling their extinguished Ambition; whether at such a Time the Regulations of our Army shall be changed to save, upon the highest Computation, only thirty thousand Pounds, is the present Question.

On fuch a Question, Sir, I cannot observe, without Assonishment, any Man deliberating for a single Moment. To suspend our Opinion in this Case, would be to balance our Lives, our Liberties, our Patrimonies, and our Posterity, against thirty thousand Pounds.

The Effects of our present Method, Sir, are well known to ourselves, our Consederates, our Enemies, to every Man that has heard the Name of Blenheim and Ramelies; the Consequences of the Establishment, now contended for, our most experienc'd Commanders own themselves unable to foresee, and I am far from believing that theoretical Disquisitions can enable any Man to make great Discoveries in Military Affairs.

Our own Inexperience of the Method which is so warmly recommended, is not the strongest Objection to it, the even this ought, in my Opinion, to restrain us from trying it at this hazardous Conjuncture. But since Arguments, merely negative, may be thought overbalanced by the Prospect of saving Money, I shall lay before the House, what Effects the Want of Officers has produced with Regard to those Nations, whose Poverty has laid them under a Necessity of parsimonious Establishments.

When the Germans were defeated by the French in the late War, I was at the Court of Turin, where the Battle was, as it may easily be supposed, the reigning Subject of Conversation, and where they did not want Opportunities of informing themselves minutely of all the Circumstances which contribute to the Event; it was there, Sir, universally determined, that the Germans lost the Day merely for want of Officers.

Regard

It was observed also, Sir, that some Troops which were once courted and seared by all the neighbouring Potentates, had lost their Reputation in latter Times, of which no Reason could be alledg'd, but that they had lessened the Number of their Officers; such is the Change in the Model of the Wallson, and such is the Consequence produced by it.

I am very far, Sir, from thinking, that Reason is not to be consulted in Military Operations as in other Affairs, and have no less Satisfaction than the learned Gentleman who spoke last but one, in clear and demonstrative Deductions; but in this Question, Reason is self-informs me, that Regard ought only to be had to Experience, and that Authority unsupported by Practice, ought to have no Prevalence.

'I shall therefore, Sir, make no Enquiry into the Abilities of the Generals by whom these contrary Opinions are defended, nor draw any Parallel between their Actions or their Knowledge. It is sufficient for me that the one is proposing a new Scheme, and that the Opinion of the other can plead the Practice of King William, and the Duke of Marlborough, and the Success of the last War.

'Yet, Sir, if Parsimony be a Virtue at this Time so eminently necessary, it may be urged in Favour of this Estimate, that it will be less expensive than those that have been formerly offered; and that as all Changes ought to be gradual, this may be considered as the sirst Step towards a general Reduction of the publick Charge.

Then Mr. Alderman Heathcote spoke to the following Purpose.

Mr. Heathcote.

It was not without Astonishment that I heard the honourable Gentleman who spoke lately, conclude his Remarks with an Attempt to renew our Apprehensions of the Pretender, a chimerical Invader, and an Enemy in the Clouds, without Spirit, and without Forces, without Dominions, without Money, and without Allies; a miserable Fugitive that has not a Friend in this Kingdom, or none but such as are exasperated by those, whom the Men, that mention him with so much Terror, are attempting to vindicate.

The Vanity, Sir, of such Fears, the Folly of admitting them if they are false, has been sufficiently exposed in this Debate, by my homourable Friend; but as he thought it unnecessary to employ Arguments in Proof of what cannot be denied, and believed it sufficient to ridicule a Panic which he supposed merely political, I who judge, perhaps, more favourably of the Sincerity of some, and more tenderly of the Cowardice of others, shall endeavour to shew, that the frequent Revolutions which have happened in this Nation, afford us no Reason for searing another equally sudden and unforeseen in Favour of the Pretender.

The Government, Sir, is always fronger, as it is complicated with the private Interest of more Individuals; because, though there are sew that have Comprehension sufficient to discern the general Advantage of the Community, almost every Man is capable of attending to his own; and tho not many have Virtue to stand up in Opposition to the Approach of general Calamities, of which every one may hope to exempt himself from his particular Share, yet the most fanguine are alarmed, and the most indolent awakened at any Danger which threatens themselves, and will exert their utmost Power to obviate or escape it.

For this Reason, Sir, I have long considered the publick Funds established in this Nation, as a Barrier to the Government, which cannot eafily be broken: A foreign Prince cannot now be placed upon the Throne, but in Opposition almost to every wealthy Man, who having trusted the Government with his Money, has reposited a Pledge of his own Fidelity.

But to this Gentleman, Sir, whom I am now answering. Arguments can be of very little Importance; because, by his own Confession, he is retained as a mere Machine, to speak at the Direction of another, and to utter Sentiments which he never conceived, and which his Hefitation and abrupt Conclusion, shews him to admit with very little Examination. He had not even allowed himself Time to know the Opinion which he was to affert, or to imprint upon his Memory those Arguments to which he was to add the Sanction of his Authority. He feems to have boldly promifed to fpeak, and then to have inquired what he was to fay. Yet has this Gentleman often declaimed here with all the appaparent Ardour of Integrity, and been heard with that Regard which is only due to Virtue and Independence.

Some of his Affertions are fuch, however, as require Confutation; which is, perhaps, more necessary, since he has produced an Authority for them, which many of those who heard him, may think of much greater Weight than his own. He affirms, That we can fuffer only by an Invation, and infers from his Polition, that we need only to guard our own Coafts. I am of an Opinion very different, and having not yet prevailed upon myself to receive Notes from any other Person, cannot forbear to speak what I think, and what the publick Prosperity requires to be generally known. We may forely fuffer by many other Causes, by the Ignorance or Treachery, or Cowardice of the Ministry, by the Negligence of that Person to whom this Gentleman was probably indebted for his Notes. We may fuffer by the Lofs of our Sugar Colonies, which may be justly valued at ten Milli-

These Plantations, which afford us almost all the profitable Trade that is now left us, have been exposed to the Infults of the Enemy, without any other Guard than two Ships, almost unfit for Service. They have been left to the Pretection of Chance, with no other Security, at a Time when when the Spaniards had fitted out a Squadron, to infest and ravage our West-Indian Colonies.

The Admiral, who was fent into the West-ladies, was confined for almost a Year in the Ports, without Forces, Ships, or Ammunition, which yet might have been fent in a few Months, had not Pretences of Delay been studiously invented, had not the Preparations been obstructed by clandesline Expedients, and had not every Man been tacitely affured, that he should recommend himself to his Superiors, by raising Difficulties, rather than by removing them.

Such was the Conduct of those, who now stand up in the Face of their Coantry; and, without Dissidence or Shame, boast of their Zeal, their Assiduity, and their Dispatch; who proclaim with an Air of triumphant Innocence, that no Assi or Diligence could have been more expeditions, and that the Embarkation was only impeded by the Seasons and the Winds.

With Affertions equally intrepid, and Arguments equally contemptible, has the fame Person, who boasted his Expedition, endeavoured to defend the Establishment of new Regiments, in Opposition to the Practice of foreign Nations, and to the Opinion of the greatest General among us; and, to shew how little he fears Consutation, has recommended his Scheme on Account of its Frugality.

'It is not to be wondered, Sir, that such an Orator should undertake to defend the Model of the Troops sent to the West Indies, that he should prefer Boys to Veterans, and as fert the Propriety of intrusting new Levies to unexperienced Commanders; for he has given us in this Debate such Proofs of controversial Courage, that nothing can be now.

His Strength, Sir, is indeed not equal to his Spirit, and he is frequently unfuccessful in his most vigorous Efforts; but it must be consessed that he is generally overborn only by the Force of Truth, by a Power which sew can resist so resolutely as himself, and which therefore, though it makes no Impression upon him, prevails upon others to leave him sometimes alone in the Vindication of his Positions.

The Examples, Sir, of those noble Persons who were advanced early to Commissions, will be produced by him without Effect, because the Cases are by no Means parallel. They were not invested with Command till they had spent some Time in the Service, and exhibited Proofs of their Courage and their Capacity; and it cannot be doubted, but some. Men may discover at Seventeen more Merit, than others in the full Strength of Manbood.

But, Sir, there is another Confideration of more Importance, which will annihilate the Parallel, and defiroy the Argument founded upon it. At the Time in which thefe Persons were preserved, the Nation had but newly seen an Army, and had therefore very sew old Officers whose Experience could be trusted, or whose Services required to be rewarded: The Ministers were obliged to select those, who, though they did not understand the Military Sciences, were likely to attain them in a short Time, and the Event has sufficiently proved, that in the Choice no greater Regard was paid to Interest than to Judgment.

It was prudent likewise, Sir, to choose young Persons, supposing their Abilities equal with those of others, because the Nation was likely to possess them longer, and would not be reduced by an Interval of Peace to make War again with raw Forces under the Direction of ignorant Comman-

But this Provision, however reasonable, the Wisdom of this Ministry has found Means to defeat, by detaining at home the disciplined Troops, and depriving the most experienced Generals of their Commands, at a Time when they are most necessary, at a Time when the whole World is in Arms, when the Ambition of France is reviving its Claims, and the Spaniards are preparing to invade our Colonies.

But, Sir, though our Generals are discarded, we are sufficiently inform'd, that it is not because we are imagined to be in a State of Sasety; for the Encrease of our Army betrays our Fear, of which whether it will be dispell'd or encreas'd by such Measures, it is not difficult to determine.

An Army thus numerous, Sir, is, in my Opinion, and of every honest Briton, of every one that reveres the Constitution, or loves his Liberty, an Evil more to be dreaded, than any from which we can be defended by it. The most unpopular Act of the most unpopular of our Monarchs, was the Establishment of a Standing Army; nor do I know any Thing to be feared from the Advancement of the dreadful Pretender to the Throne, but that he will govern the Nation with an armed Force.

If our Troops continue to be increased, which we may reasonably suspect, since, if Arguments like these be admitted, Pretences for Augmentations can never be wanting, the Consequences are casily foreseen; they will grow too numerous to be quarter'd in the Towns, and, with an Affectation of easing them of such unwelcome Guesis, it will be proposed, that after having spent the Summer in a Camp, they shall retire in Winter to Barracks. Then will the Burthen of a Standing Army be imposed for ever on the Nation; then may our Liberties be openly invaded, and those who Vol. XIII.

now oppress us by the Power only of Money, will then throw aside the Mask, and deliver themselves from the Constraint of Hypocrify; those who now sooth as with Promises and Protellations, will then intimidate us with Threatenings, and perhaps, revenge the Oppolition of their Schemes by Perfecution and Sequestrations.

THE STATE OF THE PARTY OF THE PARTY OF Lord Gage spoke next, to the following Effect: Sir, Lord Gage.

If the Weakness of Arguments proved the Infincerity of those who produce them, I should be inclined to suspect the Advocates for the Establishment of new Regiments, of Defigns very different from the Defence of their Country; but as their Intentions cannot be known, they cannot be censured, and I shall therefore confine mayfelf to an Examination of their Reasons, which they have offered, and the Authorities which they have cited.

The German General, who has been mentioned on this Occasion, with so much Regard, is not less known to me than to the honourable Gentleman; nor have I been less diligent to improve the Hours in which I enjoy'd his Friendship and Conversation. Among other Questions which my Familiarity with him intitled me to propose, I have asked him to what Caules he imputed the ill Success of the last War, and he frankly ascribed the Miscarriages of it to the unhappy Divisions by which the German Counsels were at Grid, or things, and or that Time embarrassed.

Faction produces nearly the same Consequence in all Countries, and had then influenced the Imperial Court, as of late the Court of Great Britain, to dismiss the most able and experienced Commanders, and to intrust the Conduct of the War to Men unequal to the Undertaking; who, when they were defeated for want of Skill, endeavoured to persuade their Patrons and their Countrymen, that they lott the Victory for Want of Officers.

They might, perhaps, think of their Countrymen, what our Ministers feem to imagine of us, that to gain Belief among them, it was fufficient to affert boldly, that they had not any Memory of past Transactions, and that therefore they could not observe, that the same Troops were victorious under Eugene, which were defeated under the Direction of his Successors; nor could discover that the Regulation was the same, where the Effects were different.

Thus in every Place, it is the Practice of Men in Power, to blind the People by falle Representations, and to impute the publick Calamities rather to any other Cause than their own Misconduct. It is every where equally their Practice, to oppress and obscure those who owe their Greatness to their

Virtue

Virtue or Abilities, because they can never be reduced to blind Obedience, or taught to be Creatures of the Ministry; because Men who can discover Truth, will sometimes speak it, and because those are best qualified to deceive others, who can be persuaded that they are contending for the Right.

But it is furely Time for this Nation to rouze from Indolence, and resolve to put an End to Frauds that have been so long known. It is Time to watch with more Vigilance the Distribution of the publick Treasure, and to consider rather how to contract the National Expences, than upon what Pretences new Offices may be erected, and new Dependences created. It is Time to consider how our Debts may be lessened, and by what Expedients our Taxes may be diminished, age of Engl

Our Taxes, Sir, are such at present, as perhaps no Nation was ever loaded with before; such as never were paid to raise Forces against an Invader, or imposed by the Insolence of Victory upon a conquered People. Every Gentleman pays to the Government more than two thirds of his Estate by various Exactions—This Assertion is receiv'd, I see with Surprize, by some whose ample Patrimonies have exempted them from the Necessity of nice Computations, and with an affected Appearance of Contempt by others, who instead of paying Taxes, may be said to receive them, and whose Interest it is to keep the Nation ignorant of the Causes of its Misery, and to extenuate those Calamities by which themselves are enriched.

But, Sir, to endeavour to consute Demonstration by a Grin, or to laugh away the Deductions of Arithmetic, is surely such a Degree of Essentially, as nothing but a Post of Profit can produce; nor is it for the Sake of these Men, that I shall endeavour to clear up my Assertion, for they cannot but be well informed of the State of our Taxes, whose chief Employment is to receive and to squander the Money which strikes from them.

It is frequent, Sir, among Gentlemen, to mistake the Amount of the Taxes which are laid upon the Nation, by passing over in their Estimates all those which are not paid immediately out of the visible Rents of their Lands, and imagining that they are in no degree interested in the Imposts upon Manusactures or other Commodities. They do not consider that whenever they purchase any Thing of which the Price is inhanced by Duties, those Duties are levied upon them; and that there is no Difference between paying ten Shillings a Year in Land-Taxes, and paying five Shillings in Land-Taxes, and sive Shillings to Manusactures, to be paid by them to the Government.

It would be in reality equally rational for a Man to 2 2 please

please himself with his Frugality, by directing half his Expences to be paid by his Steward; and the Event is such as might be expected from such a Method of OEconomy: For as the Steward might probably bring in salse Accounts, the Tradesman commonly adds two Pence to the Price of his Goods for every Penny which is said on them by the Government; as it is easy to shew, particularly in the Prices of those two great Necessaries of Life, Candles and Leather.

Now, Sir, let any Gentleman add to the Land-Tax, the Duties raised from the Malt, Candles, Salt, Soap, Leather, distilled Liquors, and other Commodities used in his House; let him add the Expences of Travelling so far as they are increased by the Burthen laid upon Innkeepers, and the Extortions of the Tradesmen which the Excises have occasioned, and he will easily agreee with me that he pays more than two Thirds of his Estate for the Support of the Government.

It cannot therefore be doubted that it is now necessary to stop in our Career of Expences, and to enquire how much longer this Weight of Imposs can possibly be supported. It has already, Sir, depress'd our Commerce, and over-horne our Manufactures; and if it be yet increased, if there be no Hope of seeing it alleviated, every wise Man will seek a milder Government, and enlist himself among Slaves that have Masters more wife or more compassionate.

Expences are not superfluous or detrimental, whether many of our Offices are not merely Pensions without Employment, and whether Multitudes do not receive Salaries, who serve the Government only by their Interest and their Votes. Such Offices, if they are found, ought immediately to be abolished, and such Salaries withdrawn, by which a Fund might be now established for maintaining the War, and afterwards for the Payment of our Debts.

It is now, Sir, in my Opinion, a Question whether we shall choose the dearest or the cheapest Method of encreasing our Forces, for it seems to me not possible to supply any new Expences. New Troops will require more Money to raise and to pay them, and more Money can only be obtained by new Taxes; but what now remains to be taxed, or what Tax can be encreased? The only Resource lest us is a Lottery, and whether that will succeed is likewise a Lottery; but the Folly and Credulity should once more operate according to our Wishes, the Nation is in the mean time impoverished, and at last Lotteries must certainly fail like other Expedients. When the Publick Wealth is entirely exhausted, Artifice and Violence will be equally vain. And the

PARTY OF THE PARTY OF M.

Troops may possibly be raised according to the Estimate, I know not how we shall pay them, or from what Fund, yet unmortgaged, the Officers who will be entailed upon us, can hope to receive their Half-pay.

For my Part, Sir, I think the Question so easy to be decided, that I am assonished to see it the Subject of a Debate, and imagine that the Controversy might be ended only by asking the Gentleman, on whose Opinion all his Party appear to rely without any Knowledge or Conviction of their own, whether, if he were to defend a Nation from its Enemies, and could procure only a small Sum for the War, he would not model his Forces by the cheapest Method.

Mr Sloper * spoke next.

Sir,

Advances made in useful Knowledge, by my Fellow Subjects, Mr Sloper. as the Glory of such Attainments must add to the Reputation of the Kingdom which gives Rise to such elevated Abilities.

This Satisfaction I have received from the Observations of the Right Honourable Member, whose accurate Computations cannot but promise great Improvements of the Doctrine of Arithmetic; nor can I forbear to solicite him, for the Sake of the Publick, to take into his Consideration the present Methods of Traffick used by our Merchants, and to strike out some more commodious Method of stating the Accompts between those two contending Parties Debtor and Creditor. This he would doubtless execute with great Reputation, who has proved from the State of our Taxes, that new Forces require new Funds, and that new Funds cannot be established without a Lottery.

I am indeed inclined to differ from him in the last of

I am indeed inclined to differ from him in the last of his Positions, and believe the Nation not yet so much exhausted, but that it may easily bear the Expence of the War; and shall therefore vote for that Establishment of our Troops which will be most likely to procure Success, without the least Apprehension of being censured either by the present Age, or by Posterity, as a Machine of the Ministry, or an Oppressor of my Country.'

General Wade spoke again, as follows:

Since the Right Honourable Member has been pleafed to infinuate, that by answering a plain Question I may put an End to the Debate, I am willing to give a Proof of my General Wade. Defire to promote Unanimity in our Councils, and Dispatch in our Affairs, by complying with his Proposal.

Deputy-Cofferer of the Houshold.

' If I were obliged with a small Sum to raise an Army for the Defence of a Kingdom, I should undoubtedly proceed with the atmost Frugality; but this noble Person's Ideas of Frugality would, perhaps, be very different from mine; he would think these Expences superstuous, which to me would feem indispensably necessary, and though we should both intend the Preservation of the Country, we should provide for its Security by different Methods.

' He would employ the Money in such a Manner as might procure the greatest Numbers; I should make my first Enquiry after the most skilful Officers, and should imagine myself obliged by my Fidelity to the Nation, that entrusted me with its Defence, to procure their Assistance, though at a high Price.

. It is not easy for Persons who have never seen a Battle or a Siege, whatever may be their natural Abilities, or however cultivated by Reading and Contemplation, to conceive the Advantage of Discipline and Regularity, which is fuch, that a small Body of Veteran Troops will drive before them Multitudes of Men, perhaps equally bold and resolute with themselves, if they are unacquainted with the Rules of "War, and unprovided with Leaders to direct their Motions."

I should therefore, in the Case which he has mentioned, prefer Discipline to Numbers, and rather enter the Pield with a few Troops well governed and well instructed, than with a confused Multitude unacquainted with their Duty. nuable to conduct themselves, and without Officers to con-

Mr. Vyner spoke next to the following Effect.

Sir,
I am not very folicitous what may be the Determination of the House upon this Question, because I think it more neceffary to resolve against an Augmentation of the Army, than to enquire, whether it shall be made by one Method or another.

Every Addition to our Troops I consider as some Approach towards the Ethablishment of arbitrary Power, as it is an Alienation of Part of the British People, by which they are deprived of the Benefits of the Constitution, and subjected to rigorous Laws, from which every other Individual is

' The Principal of these Laws, which all the rest are intended to inforce, requires from every Soldier an unlimited and absolute Obedience to the Commands of his Officers, who hold their Commissions, and expect Advancement by the same Compliance with the Orders of the Ministry. Colorfolish Co. DESCRIPTION OF THE PARTY NAMED IN Mr Vyner.

* The Danger of adding to the Number of Men, thus feparated from their Fellow Subjects, and directed by the arbitrary Determinations of their Officers, has been often explained with great Strength and Perspicuity; nor should I have taken this Occasion of recalling it to the Attention of the House, but that I think it a Consideration, to which, in all Debates on the Army, the first Regard ought to be paid.

Then Colonel Mordaunt spoke to the Purpose following. Sir,

The Objection which the Honourable Gentleman has raifed, will be most easily removed, by considering the Words of the Act by which the Military Authority is establish'd; where it is by no Means declared, that either Officers or Soldiers are obliged indifcriminately to obey all the Orders which they shall receive, but that they shall, on Pam of the Punishments there enacted, obey all the lawful Orders of their Commander.

. The Obedience therefore, Sir, required from a Soldier, is an Obedience according to Law, like that of any other Briton, unless it can be imagined that the Word lawful is in that Place without a Meaning. Nor does his Condition differ from that of his Fellow-Subjects by an Exemption from any Law, but by a greater Number of Duties, and stricter Obligations to the Performance of them; and I am not able to conceive how our Constitution can be indanger'd by augmenting an Army, which, as it can only act in Conformity to it, can act only in Defence of it.

The Question at last was put. That the new rais'd Troops be incorporated into the standing Corps, but it passed Farther speeches in the Negative by 232 against 166.

on the Motion for removing Sir R. Walgole.

The following SPEECHES on the Motion to remove Sir Robert Walpole from his Majefly's Councils and Pre-Jence, bave been communicated fince the Publication of our former Volumes.

Mr. Sandys, (whose Speech we gave at large, Anno 14. George II. P. 65) was seconded by Lord Limerick, who spoke to the following Effect.

Sir, As I have been for some Time a constant Opponent of Lord Limerick, the Measures by which the Motion now offered has been produced, I suppose it will create no Surprize, either in the Vindicators or Adversaries of the Gentleman to whom it relates, that I stand up to second it. To add any Thing to the Representation which you have already heard of the Miseries of the Nation, will be equally difficult and unnecessary. It is known to all, that we are oppressed with Taxes, and involved in War, that the War has been hitherto unsuccessful and ignominious, that our Fleets have been mann'd by Violence, and detained in our Harbours upon false Pretences, that our Trade has been at once diminish'd by Impresses, and betrayed by the Denial of Convoys.

' If it were necessary, Sir, to give any other Proof of the Difficulties and Distresses to which we are reduced, let it be remembered, how lately the Right Honourable Gentleman himself declared, in the Midst of our Deliberations upon the Ravages and Insults of Spain, we were not able to engage in a War, that we were without a fingle Ally to support us, and that our own Strength was not fufficient. Either this Account of our Condition was true or falle. If it was true. what can be faid in Defence of the Person who has destroyed those Ties that conjoined our Interest with that of the Powers on the Continent; who has broken the Union which Nature feemed to have formed, and which Religion had confirmed; who has conducted our Affairs with fo much Ignorance or Perfidy, that he has disgusted one Party without gratifying the other; who has drawn equally upon the Nation the Hatred of France and her Enemies, and whom neither the House of Bourbon nor of Austria can be expected to favour?

How this could have been effected, Sir, it would not be easy for any Man but our Minister to discover; nor would even his absurd Policy, and perverse Subtilty, have been sufficient, had he not aided his own Abilities by French Councils, and concurred with the inveterate and implacable Enemies of Great Britain, to involve his Country in Distress.

'If his Account of the Condition of the Nation was falle, this Falshood alone is a sufficient Motive to the Proposition which has been offered; for surely that Man ought to be removed from his Majesty's Councils for ever, who when his Country was harrasted by the Attacks of a contemptible Enemy, when its Commerce was every Day obstructed, and its Honour impaired, was so far from encouraging his Fellow-Subjects to the Assertion of their Rights, the Revenge of their Losses, and the Reparation of their Honour, that he endeavoured to fink them into Cowardice, to depress them with false Comparisons of the Strength of their Enemies with their own, and whose Counsels have no other Tendency than to encourage new Insults, and prepare the People for submissive Slavery.

Such Counsels, Sir, must proceed, in my Opinion, from other Motives than Regard to publick Felicity, and since nothing is more evident than that no Man, who prefers any Interest to that of Great Britain, ought to be intrusted with Power or admitted to Confidence. I declare, that in my Opinion, the Motion now made is necessary and just.

Mr. Wortley spoke next in Substance as follows.

- Before the Propriety of this Motion becomes the Subject Mr. Wortley. of our Debates, I think it necessary to propose, that the Order of the House be strictly observed, which is well known to require, that every Member against whom an Accusation is brought, should retire out of this Assembly, while his Conduct is examined.
- This Procedure which is established by immemorial Cufrom, and confirm'd by innumerable Precedents, is founded likewise upon right Reason; for as any Member of this Asfembly may be said to be here tried by his Associates, by Men with whom he has at least concurred in publick Affairs, and with whom he has probably been more intimately conversant. it is proper to free our Debates from those Prejudices, which cannot but be raifed by the Presence of a Man, who has been long regarded with Friendship or Esteem by those who are now become his Judges: To banish that Tenderness which may be produced by the Sight of a Companion or an Acquaintance perplexed and diffurbed; and perhaps fometimes to suppress that Awe which may be raised in Part of this Assembly by a powerful Offender, whose Looks may upbraid fome with the Benefits which they have formerly received from him, and whose Eyes may dart Menaces upon those who are dependent on his Favour.

'It is evident that to preserve Impartiality in our Enquiries, and Integrity in our Decisions, all private Regards must be laid aside; and that therefore Objects which may impress or inforce them, ought to be carefully removed; and as the Presence of the Person accused may exasperate or intimidate his Adversaries, or encourage his Friends, or awe his Followers, I move that, while this Question is debated, Sir Robert Walpole be ordered to withdraw.

Mr. Gybbon seconded this Motion.

This Motion is so agreeable to the strictest Maxims of Mr. Cybbon. Justice, the most prudent Methods of Trial, and the standing Practice of this House, that I cannot but second it as necesfarily previous to the principal Question.

The Practice of this House is only to be proved by Precedents, which are indeed sufficiently numerous; but because Vot. XIII.

to recite all the Instances which might be found in our Journals, would unnecessarily retard the Business of this Day, I shall select only some of later Date, which may shew beyond Controversy, that our immediate Predecessors did not deviate in this Respect from the Custom of antient Parliaments, and that this Method of Procedure was sound too useful to be laid aside.

'In the Reign of King James * the Second, when Mr. Coke was centur'd for the Use of Expressions disrespectful to the King, while the House was deliberating upon his Offence, he was ordered to withdraw.

When in the following Reign, among other Captains of the Navy, Captain Churchill, a Member of this House was accused of taking Money from the Merchants whose Ships he was appointed to convoy, he was first heard in his Place, and then withdrew; so far as it appears, without waiting for an Order which he knew the Practice of the House would regularly produce.

When in the Examination of Francis Rainsford, the Committee for receiving the public Accounts, having reported that Lord Faulkland had withdrawn a Letter which had been written by him, a Debate arose upon the Nature of the Offence, and the Punishment which it might be proper to inflict. Lord Faulkland having spoken in his own Vindication, withdrew, and afterwards being call'd in and heard a second Time, withdrew again. And another Dispute arising on a succeeding Day concerning two thousand Pounds irregularly received by Lord Faulkland from the King, he again withdrew, after having made his Desence.

'In the same Reign Mr. Manley being charged with indecent Expressions used by him in the Debate upon the Proceeding against Sir John Fenzuick; when the Debate began, he was required to withdraw.

'More Instances, Sir, might easily be collected, if more were necessary; but as these are sufficient to shew what has been the Practice of this House, and as that Practice may be justified by Reason, I hope we shall be careful not to depart from it on this Occasion.

* Mr Coke's Words were these, "I hope We are all Englishmen, and "not to be frightened out of our Duty by a few high Words." At which Exceptions being taken by Lord Prefton, he was, after Debate, order'd to withdraw. The whole Proceedings upon this Affair are only to be met with in Chandler's History of the Commons, Anno 1685. P. 193. No other Collection of Debates having taken the least Notice of the Proceedings of King James's Parliament. The other Precedents cited by Mr. Gybbon are also to be found in Chandler's History of the Commons, during the Reign of King William.

Mr. Bromley + answered after this Manner.

Sir.

I am very far from being convinc'd either by the Argu-Mr. Bromley. ments or Precedents which have been produced, that the Right Hou. Gentleman, to whom this Motion relates, ought to be required to withdraw.

All the Perfons mentioned in the Precedent which have been alledged, and all those that have been forbidden to be present at the Debates relating to themselves, have been charged with some known Crime, and are to be considered as standing for their Trial. But the Question in the present Case, is not whether the Right Hon. Gentleman has been guilty of the Actions imputed to him, or the Author of any particular Counsels, but whether those Actions are in themselves Criminal, or those Counsels really Pernicious. He is not charged with any Word or Act which the Laws of his Country have determined to deserve Punishment; but with Conduct which his Enemies propose first to prove Criminal, and then to punish by a new Method of Prosecution.

'In the Inflances, Sir, which have been mentioned to support this Motion, the Offenders have been allowed to hear their Accusation, and to make their Defence in their Places; nor can I discover how any Man's Conduct is impartially examined, where he is not allowed to speak in his own Defence; or how any Man can defend himself who is not per-

Mr. Howe spoke next to the following Effect.

These Precedents are in my Opinion, so far from prov-Mr. Howeing what is intended by them, that they seem to me not to have any Relation to the present Question, of which I have not yet been able to discover how it differs from the common Enquiries that are made in this House.

Whenever we enquire into the Expediency of past Meafures, our Disquisitions cannot but affect those by whom they were conducted or advised; yet they are not therefore required to withdraw during our Deliberations, but are expected to justify their Counsels, to explain their Motives, and excuse their Miscarriages.

The Charge, Sir, against the right honourable Gentleman, is only a political Enquiry into the Conduct of the Ministry for many Years; nor has it been urged in such a manner as to relate particularly to him. There is therefore no Reason for requiring him to withdraw, which will not equally shew that all those should retire at the same Time, who have concurred in the Measures disapproved by the Gentleman that made the Motion; who may then fafely promife himself Victory, when all those from whom he expects Opposition shall be banished from the House.

+ Created Lord Montfort, foun after the Diffolution of this Parlia-

Mr. Ereskine then spoke to the following Purpose.

Mr. Erefkinc.

'I am not surprized to find that on this Occasion the Friends of the Minister have Recourse to their usual Arts of Sophistry; and that they endeavour to protect his Person by the fame Fallacies with which they have always vindicated his Measures; that they labour to perplex our Enquiries by an artful Confusion of distinct Questions, and that they are defirous to exclude Light when it will only discover what it is their Interest to conceal.

' In their first Fallacy, Sir, they have not indeed been very fuccessful. Whether their Anxiety for the Event of the Day has disconcerted their Sophisms, or whether their Cause will in reality admit of no better Defence, their present Plea is fuch as Men celebrated for the Acuteness of their Penetration, and the Readiness of their Invention, might have been expected not to have alledged in a Debate of to much Importance to the Nation, and, what has always more fenfibly affected them, to themselves. Having had Warning of the Storm that was hanging over them, they should have provided themselves with some Shelter against it that might not be easily thrown down; and not have thought it sufficient to affert, what they can never hope to prove, that there is no Distinction to be made between this and any other political Enquiry.

'There is the same Difference, Sir, between this and other political Enquiries, as between national and personal Transactions, between Consultations and Trials. The Question in other Debates relates equally to every Man in the House; this affects one Man of this Assembly in a particular Manner': And furely it will not be again afferted that it is an Enquiry of the same Nature, whether a Member shall be expelled this House, or whether Peace shall be concluded with Spain.

'That this Question will incidentally produce political Debates, may reasonably be expected, because the Errors or Crimes charged upon this Gentleman are chiefly political; and when the principal Question is personal, that Man to whom it relates ought to be withdrawn while it is debated.

Colonel Bladen spoke next to the Purpose following.

I Know not upon what Arguments it is so positively asferted

ferted, that this is a Question of a peculiar Nature, and that it ought to be distinguished from other political Disquisitions; and I hope that the Zeal of the Opponents of the Ministry, however ardent, will not prompt them to require, that what is not proved should be admitted.

"I have always hitherto imagined, that those Debates which are properly political in the Interest of the Publick, is the Object of Enquiry; and as I know only two Motives that can give occasion to the present Motion, Regard to publick Happiness, and the Gratification of private Resentment, I have been candid enough to believe, that it was made with no other View than the Advantage of the Nation.

Of this, Sir, indeed I was persuaded, by the Observations with which the Motion was introduced; for to what other Purpose were all the Disappointments, Missortunes and Errors, whether real or pretended, of near twenty Years so laboriously enumerated? For what End are we informed of the long continued Insolence of the Spaniards, of our destructive Alliances with the French, of the Decline of our Commerce, and the Weakness of our Arms? Why else are the Losses of our Merchants so pathetically exaggerated, and why are we told once more of the Load of our Taxes, and the Discontent of the People?

If it be not imagined, Sir, that our Compliance with the Motion will remedy these Calamities; and that the Removal of one Gentleman from his Majesty's Councils, will revive our Trade, and invigorate our Forces; awe our Enemies, and animate our Allies; this long, this elegant Declamation, has been nothing more than an Effusion of ostentatious Eloquence, without any Intention of informing us; it has been only an Overflow of Malice, a Torrent of Invectives.

But if, as we ought to imagine, those by whom this Motion is made and defended, are persuaded, that the Counsels of one Man have sunk the Nation into Disgrace, and that by depriving him of his Insluence, they shall restore the publick Honour and Felicity, the Debate, like all others, is an Enquiry whether the Measures which they propose will produce the Consequences expected from them.

In the Precedents cited to support the second Motion, Sir, there is not the least Appearance of a Parallel with the present Case. They were Persons who had either committed an Offence in the Presence of the Assembly by which they were to be judged, and against whom it was therefore unnecessary to produce Evidence; or Men convicted of Offences by legal Testimonies, and whose Punishment was therefore the only Subject of Deliberation.

Nothing is more reasonable, Sir, than that in these Circumstances the Offender should withdraw; for to what Purpose should he continue in the House? The only Reason he has a Seat, the Reason for which every other Man has a Seat, in this Assembly, is the Right of examining, deliberating and voting: And this Right has undoubtedly ceased; since it would be absurd to consult any Man with regard to Censures which are to be inslicted upon himself, or to suffer him to vote in his own Cause.

But, Sir, with Regard to the Right Hon. Gentleman mentioned in the present Motion, the sirst Enquiry must be, whether any of the Measures objected to him are in themfelves criminal; an Enquiry at which he has the same Right to be present with any other Member, and may claim more justly a Right to speak in the Vindication of, as he is supposed to have been principally the Author of them, and consequently to be more than others acquainted with the Mo-

If it should appear, Sir, which can hardly be hoped even by those who have been long accustomed to deceive themselves with sanguine Expectations, and whom a perpetual Train of Deseats hath not awakened from their Dream of Success, that these Measures have been really pernicious, and that the Authors of them deserve Punishment; must not those Authors be discovered? Will not any particular Person be at Liberty to deny the Guilt imputed to him, and may he not claim the common Right of a British Subject to stand Face to Face against his Accuser?

That this may be justly demanded by him, Sir, appears even from those Precedents which have been produced to prove that he ought to withdraw; for all the Offenders were allowed to vindicate themselves in their Places: And if it be allowed that the Rt. Hon. Gentleman against whom the Motion is directed, may hear his Accusation, and offer his Defence, I doubt not but his Innocence will be evidently shewn, and that therefore there will be no Room for deli-

Mr. Gybbon then spoke to the following Purpose.

Mr. Gybbon.

If it be only required that the Gentleman to whom this Motion relates should hear his Accusation, that Privilege has been already enjoyed. He has already been accused of almost every Crime which ministerial Power could enable him to commit; he has been charged with destroying the Security of those Alliances which it is the invariable Interest of this Nation to preserve; with contributing to the Exaltation of that House, which has never formed any Designs but for the Destruction of the Common Liberties of Mankind, and for the Attainment of universal Empire; with neglecting the Protection of our Commerce, and betraying our Merchants to Plunder, and our Seamen to Slavery; with concealing and palliating the Insolence of our Enemies, and the Violation of our Rights; and with obstructing the Operations of the War by treacherous Delays, and hindering its Success by denying our Commanders the Liberty of Action.

The Accusations, Sir, with Regard to his domestick Conduct are still more atrocious. He is taxed as an Enemy to our Privileges, and a Violater of our Constitution as the Projector of a military Establishment by which the most pernicious Measures may be defended; and as the Corruptor of that Assembly to which the Rights of the People are intrusted. He has been openly charged with betraying his Country, and with attempting to enslave it; and, after this, is it demanded that he may hear his Accusation?

What other Crimes those who know him best expect to hear alledged against him, I am not able to conceive; but by their Demands they give us Reason to imagine that they are yet asraid of some heavier Charge, and that to have supported the publick Enemies, or to have formed a Plan of general Slavery, is not the highest Instance of his Guilt.

But whatever Crimes, Sir, his Favourites may have had Opportunities of remarking, as their Fidelity is too well known to afford any Hopes that they will discover them, we should proceed to consider the Facts already mentioned; he may therefore now produce what he may have to urge in his own Defence; after which it is allowed by all, that he ought to withdraw.

Hereupon Mr Pulteney * spoke in Substance as follows. Sir.

In all Debates it ought to be our first Care, that we Mr. Pultaney. do not suffer ourselves to be diverted from the principal Question by Considerations of small Importance; and that we do not in the Preliminaries of our Disquisitions weary that Attention, and squander those Moments which should be reserved for higher Purposes, in the Pursuit of obscure Inquiries, and the Explication of intricate Reasonings.

Whether it is not required by the Rules of strict Justice, that the Gentleman should retire, I cannot suddenly determine; but since we ought not, in the Prosecution of an Oppressor, to make Use of those Arts which we are endeavouring to prevent; and since to insist with much Vehemence on his Absence may be imagined to betray some [.] Since made Earl of Bath.

Diffidence of our Canfe, or Fear of his Abilities: I think it may very properly be left in his own Choice to thay or retire on this Occasion.

Mr Stephen Fox + then spoke to the following Effect.

Mr. Steph. Fox.

Right Hon. Person, whose Conduct we are called upon by a very extraordinary Motion to examine, I shall endeavour to answer every Part distinctly; without deviating, at least without intending to deviate, from the Order in which his imaginary Crimes have been ranged, and his supposed Mis-

'I am far from thinking it necessary to apologize for the seeming Vanity of undertaking an extempore Answer to a laboured Invective; I do not, Sir, pretend to display any uncommon Strength of Memory, Readiness and Apprehension, or Command of Argument on this Occasion; for as I have heard nothing new, I have nothing new to reply. As the Charge is only a Complication of forgotten Pamphlets, or a Recollection of former Debates, the Anguments, which every Man in this House has heard, and must have heard with Conviction.

"I was indeed, Sir, very far from suspecting those, by whom this Motion has been made and supported, of an Attempt to prevail upon the Majority of this House to condemn their own Conduct, and to prosecute one of their Members for Measures which themselves approved. I did not doubt but that a Motion so uncommon, arose from some uncommon Cause, some imagined Discovery of a secret Combination with our Enemies, an Alienation of our Claims, or a Design against our Liberties.

Full, Sir, of this Expectation, I listened with the utmost Impatience to every Period of the Speech by which the Motion was introduced; and while we were told from what Causes the Discontent of the Nation proceeds, while we were warned against the Continuance of a Standing Army, informed of the daily Increase of the Power and Instuence of the House of Bourbon, and the hourly Ravages of the Spaniards; while the Oppressions of the Excise were displayed, and the Errors of the Convention enumerated, I could scarcely forbear to call out for The Charge, for the new Topick of Accusation, to which I considered this long Detail of Centures as only preparatory; and which I supposed posed was to be represented as the Result of all former Misconduct, the Complication of every different Species of Wickedness, and to which we were conducted as to the highest Pinacle of Guilt by this Gradation of Persidy, Oppression, and Corruption.

But, Sir, fince my Expectations are deceived, fince Malice has only traced its former Steps, and that Invective which began with the Treaty of Hanover, has concluded with nothing more formidable than the Protitution of the Parliament; I shall hope to dislipate, without Difficulty, those Clouds which have been raised to hide the Truth from our Eyes, and confute those Objections once more which have been so often alledged, and so often answered.

The Difficulty of a proper Reply is now much diminished by the Occasion on which it is to be made; for it has hitherto been necessary to shew the Propriety and Usefulness of those Measures which were represented as dangerous or unprofitable; to obviate Objections which the Necessary of concealing private Intelligence, or immature Designs, did not always allow to be fully consuted; and to Justify by long Reviews, and difficult Explications of the secret Connection of Events, those Measures which, considered with Regard to the Circumstances which attended them, might seem rashly or imprudently concerted.

But in debating the present Question all that can produce Perplexity or Hesitation, must be the Distraction of the Mind by different Methods of Apology, equally proper, and for the greatest Part equally easy: For the Motion appears to be unjust, whether, those that oppose it shall evince, as they have often done, the Propriety of the Measures on which it is intended to fix an indelible Censure, or shall shew that the Person against whom it is directed did not transact them, or not without the Concurrence of the other Ministers, or the Approbation of Parliament.

With Regard, Sir, to the Treaty of Hanover, the Difficulty of this Choice will immediately occur; for though it might be eafily difpatched by a Declaration which almost every Man in the Nation knows to be true, that it was transacted at Hanover; and though the Right Hon. Gentleman may with great Security defy his Enemies to prove that he was the original Author of it, or that he promoted it otherwise than any other of the Council; yet since some may defire a fuller Account of that important Affair, which as it was transacted in the last Reign may not be otherwise known to some of the Members of this House, than by wandering Reports, or partial Representations, I shall endeavour to Vol. XIII.

flew, that the it has been long the Occasion of groundless Clamours, that it was not only prudent but necessary.

To place this Affair in its proper Light, it may be necessary to recapitulate some Occurrences which preceded it, and to consider the State of the Nation from the Beginning of the late King's Reign.

The Difficulties with which the Establishment of the Royal Family in these Kingdoms were embarrassed, are well known and univerfally remember'd. Our late King had no sooner taken Possession of a Throne, to which he was called for the Defence of Religion and the Preservation of Liberty, than Discontent, and Jealousy were spread over the whole Country: The People were already corrupted with idle Doctrines, which had no other Tendency than to facilitate the Introduction of the Pretender, by teaching that an Hereditary Right is not to be forseited, and that the Acts of Parliament, by which he was excluded, were empty Forms, without Validity and without Obligation. These Tenets were affifted by artful Calumnies, and Infinuations of pernicious Designs; and the People were wrought by various Motives to such a Degree of Frenzy, that they imagined themselves obeying the Dictates of their Religion, while they were endeavouring to expel or destroy the Monarch by whom it was supported; and imagined that their Liberty could only be preserved by the Advancement of a Prince who would believe it his Duty to persecute, and his Right to enslave them.

Infatuated, Sir, with these wild Notions of Justice and Policy, a great Part of the Nation thought it necessary to refuse Obedience to the Government; to set the Laws at Defiance; and to declare their Adherence to another Prince for whose Service Armies were levied, and whom a Foreign Monarch, celebrated for Romantic Valour and Chimerical Expeditions, was invited to establish. So little did these Madmen in the Heat of their Zeal regard the Welfare of their Country, that they willingly exposed it to the Plunder of rapacious Mercenaries, and to all the Devastations which were to be expected from Troops accustomed to all the Cruelties of War; restrained by neither Tenderness nor Interest, and who could only enter these Kingdoms with a Design to load themselves with Plunder, and live at Ease in their own Country upon

That this Disturber of the World was snatched away by the Chance of War, in the midst of new Schemes for the Ruin of Nations, and new Designs of augmenting his Power; and the Army of the Rebels, for want of Discipline and Commanders was easily overthrown; and that both Justice and Lenity were employed to influence the People, I need not relate; fince the Events are too recent and too publick not to be remember'd. But though the Laws recovered their Authority, and Subordination was again established: it was not reasonable to imagine that Force had produced any Change in Opinions, or that those whose Designs had been defeated believed them unjust, because they had been unsuccessful. It might be with Justice suspected, that those who durft clamour no longer openly, murmured in private; and that they whose Swords had been wrested from their Hands, would not fail to fnatch them again, when they could promise themselves stronger Support, or more resolute Affociates.

' Such. Sir, was likewife the Opinion of all Foreign Princes of the State of Great Britain, which they confidered as governed by a King to whom more than half of his People were subject only by Force, and whom it was easy to embarrass with Insurrections whenever he should interpose in the Affairs of the Continent. They conceived the two Parties in this Kingdom to be in an Equipoile, and believed that

It has been observed, that with regard to Governors and Subjects, Power subsists upon Opinion, and the same Remark may be extended to the Competition between different States. To be thought weak, and to be weak in Reality, may sometimes produce the same Consequences. Enemies in either Case are excited to Insolence, and invited to Invasion; and though they may fometimes meet with Refistance which they did not expect, they may likewise sometimes in the Uncertainty of human Schemes be conducted by Error to the End which they proposed; and succeed by a Concurrence of favourable Accidents in Enterprizes, which they were induced to undertake only by a weak Confidence in false Reports.

* Thus, Sir, our Divisions naturally impaired the Influence of the King, and weakened his Government even when all real Danger of a Revolution had ceased, when Reason had regained its Influence, and the Phantoms of counterfeit Loyalty had been dispelled by the Light of Truth. It was the Interest of Foreign Princes to believe him still farrounded by Enemies, and 'tis well known how difficultly Opinions are eradicated which are complicated with favourite Passions. There was in the Nation a numerous Faction who under various Denominations, and upon various Motives favoured the Claim of the Pretender; this Faction was represented far more numerous, more powerful, and more rettless than it was; and those Princes whom Chance or Ambition made the Enemies of the King of Great Britain, imagined that they had Allies in his own Dominions, that Armies would start up CORD of an inself could not out of our Towns and Villages at the Promife of Affillance, and that they might oblige him to submit to any Terms, or pursue him to Ruin, or to Death, at the Expense of his own Subjects.

Such, Sir, was the Opinion which prevailed in all the Courts of Europe, at the Time when our late King was informed that a Confederacy had been formed against him by the Courts of Madrid and Vienna; in which nothing less was designed than the Destruction of our Trade both in the Indies and the Mediterranean, the Subversion of our Liberties, and the Advancement of the Pretender to the Throne. Against this Confederacy he secured the Nation and himself by an Alliance which counterballanced it, and by entering into the Treaty of Hanower with France, divided the Power of the House of Bourbon.

The Confederacy of the Germans with the King of Spain, has been often ridiculed as improbable and imaginary; and those who could not deny its Reality have represented it as an airy Project, a Scheme which it was not pessible to execute, and which it was therefore not necessary to obviate by any extraordinary Measures.

But the Probability of such an Alliance appears from a View of the State of the Nation, and of the Opinions of Forcign Princes at that Time. It was natural to project the Introduction of the Pretender into these Kingdoms, because it was believed that he would be welcomed at his Arrival by the Acclamations, and supported in his Enterprize by the Arms of the People. It was rational to believe that they should be able to deprive us of our Trade, because the New tention of our Government from Foreign Affairs, and it was not likely that any thing would be denied by him to such kind Assistance, and so useful Allies.

That the Spaniards were convinced of the Possibility of this Project, we may be assured, Sir, from the Considence with which they exposed a small Body of their Troops, to be slaughtered, by landing them on the northern Part of this Island. No Man can imagine that they expected from them alone either Conquests or Resistance; and it is therefore evident that they expected them to be joined by the Inhabitants, and imagined the Disassection so general, and the People so warlike, that to erect a Standard and to raise an

Nor will it be difficult to conceive that this Opinion might be communicated with little Labour to the Court of Vienna, if we reflect how readily every Prince hearkens to Accounts that flatter his Inclinations, and how welcome every Report will always be found, that encreases our own Dignity and Power, by representing our Competitors as unable to fland before us.

'I am, Sir, indeed far from believing that the united Power of Germany and Spain could have driven our Monarch from his Throne; or that the Nation would even at that Time have received the Pretender supported by a foreign Power: But to infer that no such Design was formed, because it would probably have failed in the Execution, is by no means rational. It is to suppose that Men are never blinded by their Passions, or deceived by their Intelligence; that opposite Parties see the same Objects in the same Light, and that every Man proportions his Undertakings to his Strength.

The Error, Sir, of those Princes was far from being fuch as could diminish their political Reputation; if we suppose them zealous for their Religion, the Force of Enthusiasm has been often seen; if we suppose their Heads heated by Ambition, it is easy to conceive that they might be hurried forward to imaginary Conquests which their Armies could never have atchieved; if we consider them as corresponding with the disaffected Part of our own Nation; we know how readily every Man persuades himself that his own Party will prevail, how he exaggerates in his own Mind its Numbers, its Wealth, and its Unanimity, and considently affirms to others what he has learned to believe himself.

From all these Causes, co-operating at once, what Degrees of Infatuation may not be expected? what may not Monarchs be capable of undertaking, who being infected with Lust of Dominion, imagine that their Happiness will be encreased as their Empire is extended; who think their Ambition authorised by Religion, and are affured by those whom it is the highest Act of Impiety to disbelieve, that they shall fight under the Banner of Omnipotence? That Heaven will assist those Forces which are levied for the Extirpation of Heresy, and that they are appointed to put an End to the Prevalence of Schism?

When to these Motives, Sir, it is added, that the Attempt is in itself without Danger, and that they are only to assist the greater Part of the Nation in butchering the less; is it to be imagined, that Opportunities so favourable will not be improved? That any Monarch will sorbear to give an Instance of his Piety, when he may shew it by gratifying his Ambition? Or that he will not engage in a Design at once pleasing, easy and meritorious?

Perhaps these Considerations, Sir, may induce the House to allow that his late Majesty, neither deceived the Parliament by false Representations, as has been infinuated by the honourable Gentleman, nor was himself deceived; yet since it has been alledged that the Consederacy of the Spaniards and Germans, if it was ever formed, was a Consederacy of Madmen; that their Designs ought to have raised Pity rather than Fear, and to have been ridiculed rather than opposed, it may be proper before we dismiss this Transaction to enquire what was really to be dreaded from them.

'It is well known, Sir, that the Favourers of the Pretender were at that Time sufficiently numerous to disturb the Nation, though not to inslave it; and that their Discontent was such as might naturally have incited them to a Rebellion, by which, though it would probably have ended in their Defeat, our Country might have been harrassed for a long Time; and the Hon. Gentleman will scarcely affirm that a Civil War is not a Calamity to be very cautiously avoided, what Party soever may be likely to prevail.

'If it is not to be imagined that Troops could have been landed on our Coasts in such Numbers as might have threatned Conquest, they might at least have burnt our Villages, and destroyed the Inhabitants; they might have rawaged our unfortified Towns, laid whole Counties desolate, and filled the Nation with Horror and Consuson; and when our Armies had at length destroyed them, the Injury might

' From fuch Miseries, Sir, if we were preserved by a seasonable Alliance with France, can the Author of it be censured as an Enemy of Great Britain? Can it be affirmed that Invasions and Civil Wars are to be preferr'd to an Alliance by which no Claim was refigned, and in which mutual Security was honourably (tipulated upon equal Terms) ' If we confider, Sir, what has been urged against this Treaty, we shall be able to recollect only violent invectives without Proof, and noify Declamations without Reafon. We have been told that France is the irreconcileable Enemy of Great Britain, that her Resentments are never to be extinguished, and that her Interests are invariably opposite. We are told that to enter into Alliances with France is to deftroy at once that Plan of Power, that our Ancestors have exhausted their Treasures to establish, and to sacrifice all the Advantages of the last War.

These, Sir, are indeed pompous Expressions by which the Imagination may be warmed, but which have little Efficacy to convince the Reason; Sounds which may raise Commotions in a popular Assembly, but can not have much Influence upon a Parliament. That our Ancestors have generally employed their Strength and Policy in Opposition to France, cannot be denied; but if we think their Example such as ought to influence our Measures, we must imagine them to have acted upon rational Motives, and are therefore only to resemble them in our Conduct, as we resemble them in the Circumstances of our Affairs.

They opposed the French, because they had no other Enemy to sear; and upon the same Principle would have united with them against an Enemy from whom they were both in Danger; nor could they entail upon us any Scheme of Conduct, unless they could ascertain the Course of Events. To believe, that we are invariably to declare ourselves Enemies to France, is to be deceived by idle Sounds, and to follow Prejudice instead of Policy. It is our Interest to oppose that Nation with most Vigour from whom we have most to sear; not to enquire whom our Ancesters hated or dreaded, but who has at present the strongest Inclination and the greatest Power to injure us; to regulate our Alliances according to the Interests of foreign Princes, to observe the Rotations of Power, and vary our Politics as different Exigencies may happen to require.

It might at least, Sir, be expected from those who have declaimed for so many Years against the Treaty of Hanover, that they should have shewn us what ill Consequences have been produced by it; what Part of our Trade we have relinquished, or what Pretensions we have resigned. It might not be unequitable to require, that they should prove this Transaction to have brought upon us greater Evils than those from which we were rescued; the Horrors of an Invasion, and the Miseries of a Civil War.

The Charge, Sir, of Deserting our Ally is easily resuted, since that Ally was not deserted till he had formed Schemes for our Destruction: That we contributed to aggrandise the House of Bourbon, though it has been echoed round the Kingdom, has not been proved; since no Man, however consident in his Assertions, or vehement in his Investives, has undertaken to shew, that the Treaty of Hanover either increased the Wealth, extended the Influence, or enlarged the Dominions of France. She gained nothing by it but a Neutrality, which, without any such previous Stipulation, it had been our Interest to observe; but which, perhaps, had not that Alliance been concluded, would have appeared the Effect of Cowardice or Weakness.

It was faid indeed by the Honourable Gentleman, that the French have given us no Affishance; but it does not appear that we wanted or required it, or that by the Treaty of Hansver, we had a Right to demand it. Our Enemies were discouraged from an Invasion by finding that they could no longer expect Success.

Is it not, Sir, some Advantage that an Enemy who was elated to a Degree of Insolence, that incited him to form Designs upon our Country, to plan the Subversion of our Constitution, and doom us to irrecoverable Slavery, was reduced to confine his Resentment to petty Ravages, and Insults rather malicious than dangerous? That instead of spreading Destruction over Britain, he was content to besiege a Rotter's with held from him in his own Territories.

Some have afferted in the Heat of their Animofity, when irritated by frequent Defeats, and oppressed by Arguments to which they were unwilling to yield, the they sound themselves unable to consute them, that the Rapine and Insolence of the Spaniards have been always secretly encouraged by France: This, Sir, is an Infinuation of which it does not appear to me, that the Importance is proportioned to the malignant Pleasure with which it is produced; for how can it affect the Conduct of the Ministry, whether it be true or false?

If the French, Sir, did in reality exasperate the Spanards against us, at the Time when they engaged with the utmost Solemnity to assist us against them; if while they were exchanging Ratiscations, and redoubling Protestations of Friendship, they endeavoured to embarrass our Government, and obstruct our Commerce, what can be inferred from their Conduct but their own Persidy? And by what Law is a Minister of Great Britain to be punished for those Crimes in which he did not concur?

In Political as in private Transactions mutual Trust is unavoidable; nor can any more be required from either Party than to preserve his own Faith, and watch that the other does not make use of an Appearance of Friendship to injure or betray him. No Man ought to suffer but for his own Wickedness or Negligence, because no Man can regulate the Conscience of another.

But it is not necessary, Sir, to have Recourse to the secret Operation of remote Agents for the Explication of Events, of which the immediate Causes may be so easily assigned. The Spaniards, though they found their Scheme of an Invasion no longer practicable, had yet so much Considence in the Accounts which they had received of the Violence of our Factions, and the Ardour of our Animosities, that they imagined us to be in a State that would not allow us to regard our Honour or our Commerce, and believed that they might without Danger insult our Flag and plunder our Merchants.

That this Opinion was the Foundation of their Conduct, and that they fill retain it with a Degree of Bigotry peculiar to themselves, appears, Sir, from their Manisello lately published. Our Divisions are there mentioned with an Appearance of Triumph, which perhaps may be still heightened by an Account of the present Debate, and to which the Opponents of the Administration, whatever may have been their Intentions, it must be consessed, have long contributed.

Against these Depredations, Sir, frequent Remonstrances were made, and Promises of Inquiry and Reparation were constantly returned, with what Degree of Sincerity it was not possible for our Ministers to determine. The Distance of the Spanish Territories made it easy for the Governors to elude the Orders of their Master, or to deceive him with salle Representations, which could not always be constructed by our Ministers before their Attention was diverted by some new Controversy. The Delays in the Spanish Forms of Proceeding, well adapted to favour any fraudulent Design, often made it impossible to procure Proof of an unjust Seizure, for the Master of a Vessel was perhaps dead, and his Crew dispersed, before his Cause was determined.

It might indeed be suspected that these Ravages were not committed by the Subjects of Spain without the Connivance of their Court; and that the Orders sent to Spain would not have been so long cluded, had the Officers believed that Compliance would have been more likely to procure Favour or Promotion: But as their King not only disowned their Proceedings, but promised that justice should be rigorously observed; and as War is always the last Remedy which a wife Government employs, it was thought more prudent to preserve our Claims by frequent Repetitions, and to wait for some Opportunity of obtaining their Construction, than to affert them by Force, and load the Nation with the Expences of a War.

When the Project was formed of ethablishing Don Carlos in Italy, we thought the Opportunity obtained which we had so long defired, and therefore readily complied with the Propositions which were made us for establishing a lasting Peace with Spain. This indeed we did not submit to purchase at a high Rate, for the Transportation of Don Carlos, though it gratisted the Ambition of his Mother, was no great Sacrifice on our Part. There was no Enemy to encounter, no Danger to fear; and the Expence which alone can be complained of, ought to be compared with that of a War which it was probable we might avoid by it.

Yet the Ministry, Sir, by this Step furnished their Ad-You, XIII. versaries with a new Theme for Declamation; they have been charged with throwing Weight into that Scale of Power which was too heavy before, with propagating the Influence of the House of Bourbon thro' the whole Continent of Europe, and with endangering our future Commerce by investing them with the Dominion of the Mediterranean.

But before these Invectives are indulged, it ought to be proved that we granted some Advantage which it was impositick to grant, and which it was in our Power to deny; that we could have hindered the Spaniards from the Acquisition of that Part of Italy, or have hindered them without more Expence and Danger, than our Interest in the Transaction could induce us to incur.

'It ought to be examined, Sir, whether it was not more prudent to procure a Reconciliation of long Disputes, by affishing them in an Enterprise which they could have executed by their own Strength; and by appearing to favour Designs which we could not effectually obstruct; than to exasperate Hatred and instance Quarrels by needless Opposition, and to harrass ourselves with a War of which it was impossible to foresee the Success, or fix the Duration.

It was faid by the hon. Gentleman, that our Compliance had no other Effect upon the Spaniards than to heighten their Infolence, to harden their Obitinacy, and to confirm their Contempt; that therefore our Money was lavished without Recompence, and our Alliance offered only to be

I confess, Sir, that neither the Policy nor the Gratitude of the Spaniards, could induce them to improve the Advances which were made at Seville into a firm and lasting Friendship; that their Insolence had not been abated, or their Pretensions remitted; and that their Depredations after a very short Suspence were renewed with equal Rapacity and equal Cruelty. Of this the Parliament itself has complained in its Addresses to the King, nor does the Cause of which I have undertaken the Defence, require that any Truth should be denied or disguised.

These Ravages and Cruelties, Sir, are Facts of which no Man will dispute the Certainty or palliate the Injustice; but it appears to me, that every impartial and candid Enquirer will discover, that they cannot rationally be charged on the Ministry: For how can it be imagined that they could willingly promote the Disappointment of their own Measures, or what Interest can they be supposed to advance by increasing the Discontent of the People? The Conduct of the Spaniards must be therefore attributed only to themselves; nor can it be expected that we should undertake to reform their Folly or their Wickedness, or to teach them either Politicks or Gratitude.

I cannot but observe, Sir, that in the Charges made by the Hon. Gentlemen, the Crimes of Mankind are amassed together and thrown upon a fingle Person, who is so unfortunate in his Situation, that he is equally to be accused of the Misconduct of his Friends and of his Enemies; of Transactions by which his Influence is apparently diminished, as well as those by which it may seem to be advanced: He is represented as the general Dictator of Guilt, nor is any Man imagined to deviate from the Right, but by his Instigation or Connivance.

" Unhappy furely is the Lot of that Man, from whom an Account is required of the Conduct of those whom he has not Power to direct; whom neither Distance nor Ignorance can secure from being an Associate in every Act of Wickedness; and whose Innocence can only be preserved by a Reformation of the Universe. . That the Ministry, Sir, have been insensible of the Sufferings of their Country, that they have feen without Concern the Obstruction of our Trade, and heard without Compassion the Complaints of our Merchants; that they have fat at Ease in the Enjoyment of their Salaries, while their Fellow-subjects were languishing in Distress; and insulted or neglected those Calamities which their Indolence, Unskilfulness or Cowardice had brought upon the Nation, are Infinuations which ought not to be credited, because they cannot be proved.

Their frequent Remonstrances to the Court of Spain afford sufficient Evidence, that they did not forget their Duty or neglect it; their Affertion of our Rights shew that they had no Intention to refign them. And the Charge of Infensibility, Negligence, and Corruption, must be reduced at last only to this, that they thought Success more likely to be obtained by Negotiation, which others expected only from Violence and Slaughter.

· Had the Spaniards, Sir, been persuaded at length to attend to the Remonstrances of Justice, to restore what they could not retain without Robbery, and admit what they cannot deny without the Violation of the most solemn Treaties; had the Pacific Acts of Negotiation terminated our Disputes, procured Security to our Trade, opened the Seas of the West-Indies, and established, upon equitable Terms, that Concord which is necessary to the Happiness of both Nations: Would those allow themselves Criminal who had so long founded the Trumpet of War, who had called out mincessantly for Reprisals and Revenge, and who had exhau-CC2 7 1

sted their Eloquence to inflame the Resentment of the Nation, and to meite the Parliament to Impatience and Vional lence? Would they have admitted, that they might be deservedly centured as the Enemies of their Country, for and for promoting to precipitate us into an unnecessary War, and for promoting Havock, Bloodshed and Consustors.

Would they not have orged that they had only given their Opinion, with that Liberty which is allowed in Parliamentary Debates, and with that Sincerity which Patriotism requires? That they were deceived by false Appearances, or hurried on by a Zeal too impatient of the Injuries of the Publick? That they did not lay any Claim to Prescience or Infallibility, and that involuntary Errors could never be justly punished, because they could not be avoided? And would not this Plea have satisfied the most rigorous Enquirer, and pacified the warmest Resentment?

Whoever, Sir, admits the Validity of this Excuse, which he that denies has no great Regard to his own Honour or Safety, must allow, that it may be now urged, with equal Justice, in Vindication of the Ministry. If they have been mistaken in their Choice of Measures, they have been betrayed into Error only by their Caution; nor did their Delays proceed from any other Cause, than the Fear of encreasing the Expences of the Publick, and hazarding the Quier of Europe by precipitate Refolutions.

1 shall not insist at this Time on the Probability that contrary Measures, if they had been persued by the Ministry, would have been opposed with equal Vehemence, and their Absurdity aggravated with the same Violence of Declamation: That the Ministry would have been represented as Mem hardened against all the Impulses of Humanity; who look'd with Satisfaction on Slaughter, Devastations and Cruelty; who were delighted with embroiling the World, and employing one Nation in the Destruction of another; who had involved their Country in foreign Wars only to divert the Attention of the Publick from their own Miscarriages and Corruption; and who would prolong it without End, as it might give them Opportunities of gratifying their Friends and expossing their Adversaries.

That such would have been the Outcries of the Oppofition, if more violent Measures had been persued, I do not assirt, whatever I may believe. I do not affirm it, because I think that every Affertion ought to be supported by i.v. dence, and that Positions and Conjectures are to be carefully deslinguished. I will however declare with great Considence, that this Accusation had been more just and more plansible; and that the Vulgar, upon whom the Influence fluence of Sounds is well known by Experience to the Opponents of the Ministry, would have been more easily inflamed by artful Representations of the Horrors of a destructive War, than of the Shame of a dishonourable Peace. I cannot, therefore, but once more suspect, that they whose constant Hope of Success has arisen from a Practice of appealing from the Parliament to the Rabble, could not have suffered so commodious a Topic to escape them; but would have exhibited the Ministry to public Views as blood-thirsty Monsters, who were daily facrificing the Lives of thousands to their Caprices; and because they had no Tenderness for their Caprices; and because they had no Tenderness for their Fellow-subjects, preserved War to Peace; who contemplated with Pleasure those Dangers in which they never involved themselves, and seased their Imagination with Slaughters which heightened the Pleasure of their own Security.

But that there are indeed Infults which must be resented, and Evils to which War itself is to be preferred, cannot be denied; and such at length has the Parliament declar'd the Insolence and Rapacity of the Spaniards, against whom therefore War has been proclaimed, and prosecuted in such a Manner as was most likely to attain the End for which War ought always to be made; the Redress of Wrongs and

ACRES ..

But the Ministry, Sir, have been no less unfortunate in their Conduct of the War than in their Methods of Negotiation; for their Opponents appear resolved to be equally diffatisfied on every Occasion, and to discover Treachery, Cowardice, or Corruption, whatever Measures are persued.

The War has indeed had already one Effect that they may, without want of Candour, be suspected of desiring. It has furnished them with numerous Topics of Accusation which they could not have obtained in Time of Peace. It has given them an Opportunity of diversifying their Invectives, and enlivening their Harangues; and enabled them to fubilitute new Calumnies in the Place of those which. though no longer credited, they had been hitherto forced to repeat. The Excise, which had with unwearied Eloquence been for many Years echoed from one fide of this House to the other; the Dangers of a Standing Army which had been exaggerated with all the Zeal of ardent Patriotism; and even the Convention which, tho' a later Subject, had been difcussed till it was no longer a Terror but a Vexation to Mankind, gave way to more splendid Themes! Themes on which the Imagination might expatiate without Labour, and Eloquence wanton without the Aid of Invention: They harangued now on the Bravery of our Sailors, the Strength of the property of the land of

of our Nation, the Triumphs of our Ancestors, and the Weakness of Spain.

· But when they had amused themselves with the Display of our Power, and gratified their Love of their Country by a Recollection of her ancient Glory, they always concluded with a pathetical Lamentation of our present Miferies; they complained that our Force was refrained by the Corruption of our Governors; that the Courage of our Sailors was of no other Use than to heighten their Impatience of the ignominious Inactivity to which they were condemned; that our ancient Honours were tamely suffered to be torn from us; that we were no longer courted, reverenced, or feared; that the Spaniards, however weak, however contemptible, were yet successful in the War; and that we perceived no other Effect of our Armaments than Expence and Disappointments.

When they were asked from what Causes these Complaints proceeded, what Dominions had been taken from us. or what Battles we had loft, it was answered, that not to have conquered in fuch a War was to be overcome; that it was expected by the People of this Nation, that a lingle Fleet should have reduced Spain to Submission, and that one Effort of the British Force might put us in Possession of the entire life and when

Such Expectations indeed it is common for the People to form at the Commencement of a War; and it has not been unufual for Governors to promote them, though perhaps without sufficient Regard to Justice or to Prudence; neither of which could ever countenance the Propagation of Palthood For if the People are perfuaded to think too highly of their own Strength, what can be expected but that they will demand Success proportioned to their imaginary Force? And that the Blame of every Defeat will fall upon the Government?

Such Expectations, Sir, were therefore never raifed by the Ministry, because they knew that they could only be gratified by Chance, in which no wife Man will put any Confidence : But they were eagerly excited by the Boalters of Patriotism who knew that Success would be received as a Confirmation of their Predictions, and would establish the Reputation of their Sagacity; but that any Defeat would be imputed to the Ministry, and blow up the Flames of publick Hatred; and that in the mean Time they gained every Day the Favour of the Populace, to whom nothing is more grateful than exaggerate Representations of their own Strength.

. They therefore called out incessantly for a vigorous Prosecution of the War; they required that Insolence should no longer be born without Resentment, nor Rayages without

Reprifals :

Reprifals: they demanded that Fleets should be equipped, that Commerce should be protected, and Spain humbled.

Ships were accordingly put into Commission, new Veffels were built, the Workmen in the Docks were enjoined double Labour, naval Stores were purchased and Contracts for Provisions made every Day; but our Fleets completely rigged remained in our Harbours for want of Men, and our Enemies roved at large over the Ocean, while we were soliciting our Sailors to engage in the Service of the Publick.

For removing this Obstacle, Sir, at which the Opponents of the Ministry were for the greatest Part content to clamour; without any Endeavour or perhaps any Desire to furmount it, because they found specious Reasons for imputing it to the Administration, many Schemes were offered: But they were almost always opposed with the utmost Obstinacy, by Men who had wearied the Parliament with the Justice and Necessity of the War, with the Diminution of our Trade, and the Importance of an uninterrupted Navigation.

When one Project was disapproved, another was proposed; and nothing was left unattempted that might contribute to that Success which all appeared to wish, though only the Ministry endeavoured to procure it. But to every Proposal that could be formed, to every Method that Invention or Experience could suggest, so many Inconveniences were objected by the zealous Guardians of the Liberties of the People, that much Time was wasted, and Losses suffered by the Merchanes.

But that Sagacity, Sir, which always enabled them to improve every Accident to their own Advantage, fuggetted to them that they might now accuse the Ministers of delaying the Preparations for War, detaining the Ships which were to guard the Coasts, and exposing the Merchants by Negligence or Design to the Rapacity of the Spanish Privateers.

At length, Sir, our Fleets in the West Indies began Hostilities; the Spaniards were confined to their Ports; their Colonies were kept in continual Terror; and one of their most important Settlements was laid in Ruins. Who would not now have thought that the Ministry had given sufficient Proofs of their Sincerity in the Profecution of the War, and that there could be no longer any Pretence for Complaints? But even this Advantage served only to shew, how a vigilant and sagacious Patriot can improve every Occurrence to the Propagation of his Tenets and the Support of his Cause. The Ministry, Sir, was on this Occasion once more loaded with Calumnies; they were now accused as secretly chagrined at the

the public Felicity, and incensed against that Commander by whom the Honour of our Nation was retrieved, and the Infolence of our Enemies repressed.

'How the Ministers gave Occasion to so atrocious a Charge, it may not be improper to declare. When those who had for many Years affected a particular Degree of Solicitude for the publick Welfare, and who had been distinguished by their Zeal for a War with Spain, heard the first Rumour of that Success which they had so considently predicted; it was their Employment once more to engage the Populace by entertaining them with the delightful Narative, uniting in their Acclamations and partaking of their Triumph.

For this Purpose, Sir, they did not fail to exaggerate the Enterprise, and magnify the Advantages that were to be expected from it; and so wanton was their Imagination, that it formed no Ideas but of the Conquest of the Wist-Indies, and the utter Destruction of the Spanish Dominions.

The Friends of the Government, the pleafed with the Success of the Expedition in proportion to its Importance, discovered no such Raptures of Exultation: They rejoiced indeed, but with that Moderation which accompanies true Greatness of Mind; they praised the Bravery and Prudence of Vernon, but without exalting him above all his Predecessors; they thought that to give way to an Excess of Praise or Joy upon any slight Advantage, had a Tendency to lessen the Reputation of our Arms, as it might be inferred by Foreigness that our Exultation was produced only by our Fear.

Whatever, Sir, were the Motives of their Conduct, it may be imagined that in a Nation where Freedom is so lavishly boasted, every Man might plead an Exemption from the Necessity of joining his Voice to Shouts of which he did not know the Reason, or which he thought too loud for the Occasion which produced them; and that no Man would accuse him of Disassection to his Country, because he did not evaporate in useless Congratulations, and wild Effusions of Jollity.

But as Men refolv'd to censure can never want a Fund of Accusation, no sooner were the Ministers stigmatized as Enemies to Vernon, than they were discovered to have formed a Plot for his Destruction in Concert with the Spaniards and French; whose Fleets had found an Opportunity of uniting, while our Admiral was cruising on another Part of the Coast, and guarding a Fortress of which the Importance has been formerly one of the popular Subjects of Declaration. They indeed sailed immediately to the West Indies, before there was any Opportunity of interrupting their Course; but how little they performed, and how hamefully they returned is well known. If it be true, that they failed with the Confent of our Ministers, as infinuated by the hon. Gentleman, it must be allowed, that they were trapan'd by them into uscless Expences and unprofitable Fatigues; and that they have at length Reason to complain of that Friend, by whom they are faid to have been so long favoured and assisted.

But what Defence can be made of the Conduct of the Minister, when it is urged that the French are now, in Opposition to all the Faith of Treaties, busy in the Reparation of the Port of Dunkirk; and that they are establishing an Afylum for Privateers, and preparing to dispute the Command of the Channel? What, but that by confessing that they act in Contradiction to Treaties, it is granted that the Ministry is to be acquitted; for let me once more remind those who may be inclined to patronife the Motion, that no Man is to be punished for the Dishonesty of another.

Such, Sir, is the Charge against the Administration of foreign Affairs, and with so little Difficulty is that Charge refuted. Whether the Conduct of domestics Transactions will not admit of a Vindication yet more clear and easy, remains now to be examined.

As it is never grateful to my Disposition, to think or speak with Contempt of any Man, I am not without some doubt whether I thould not pass over the Excise in Silence; for who can restrain his Imagination from some Sallies of satirical Merriment, when he fees Men refolved to accore without any Subject of Accusation; and finds Malice reduced to the Neceffity of gratifying itself with Dreams of imaginary Hard-Thips and mere Possibilities of Guilt.

Let us state the Question so far as it relates to the Excise with Coolness and Impartiality. About eight Years ago the Right Hon. Gentleman was faid to have formed a Scheme which was proved to be advantageous to the Revenue, and faid to be detrimental to the People. This Scheme was laid before this House, and approved by the greater Number, but was thrown afide by him to gratify the People; and it is now moved that the supposed Author of this Scheme should be for ever excluded from his Majesty's Counsels.

Such, Sir, is the Crime, and fuch is the Punishment. A Person distinguished for his Abilities and samous for his Ardour for Liberty, long honoured with the Favour of his Sovereign, and long intrusted with the most important Employments, is to be branded with Infamy and deprived of Trust; for having been suppos'd to form Measures which were s suspected of a pernicious Tendency, and from which that Suspicion induced him to defilt.

Had the Scheme been really pernicious, and really reduced to Practice, it might have been imagined that the Approbation of the Parliament would have exempted him from Profecution; but this Approbation, it feems, is now no longer to be pleaded, because the Parliament is no longer the Representative of the People; this House is only a Herd of Slaves hired to drudge for their Master, and to give up to his Disposal the Rights, the Properties, and Lives of their Fellow-Subjects.

'That this Charge, Sir, is known by the greater Part of this House to be false may easily be conceived; but it will appear an Assertion somewhat daring to declare that it is known to be false by those that produce it; and yet why else do they produce it, much more why do they produce it here? Can they expect that any Man should concur in his own Ruin; that a House of which the Majority vote for Pay, will detect or punish that Corruption by which they are influenced; or that any Man who has received a Bribe will inform against the Hand that gave it?

When they apply to this House for the Detection or Punishment of Bribery, they must believe that the greatest Number is not influenced by Money; and yet if that be their Opi-

'It has been urged in Justification of the Motion, that whether Miscarriages in publick Affairs arise from Error or from Design, they equally prove the Necessity of removing him, by whom they were transacted, from Places of Trust; because the Publick may be equally injured by Incapacity or Treachery. Will it not in the same Manner appear, that those who have produced this Charge ought to be excluded from the Management of publick Affairs, whether it be true or false; since if it be true, their Conduct can be the Effect only of Madness, and if it be false, of Wickedness.

But whatever be at length determined with regard to the Facts which have been so often examined, whether the Treaty of Hanover was beneficial or detrimental to the Nation, whether the Spaniards have been opposed or supported in their Insolence, whether the French have incited or restrained them, whether the Excise was a Scheme of Oppression, or a rational Method of preventing Abuses, and whether the Parliament be corrupt or honest, how can the Propriety of the Motion be be evinced? Why is it directed against this Person? And why are not others included in the same Censure?

'The only Reason of this Motion which can be openly avowed, must be the Desire of punishing the Author of the publick Miseries, and deterring others from the same Crimes by an Example of Justice and Severity. But it has in all former Times been thought necessary to prove Guilt before it

Sentence should precede the Trial.

In the present Case, Sir, it is afferted that the Nation is reduced to Ignominy and Distress; that it is oppressed by an unnecessary Army, and loaded with Taxes, of which it does not appear how they can be employed but to corrupt the Parliament; and it is demanded therefore, not that the Enquiries should be made into the State of the Publick, not that the Army should be disbanded, or that our Taxes should be reduced, but That Sir Robert Walpole be removed from his Majessy's Presence and Counsels.

'Such a Proposal could be dictated only by the Rage of disappointed Opposition, which has at length collected all its Force, and exerted all its Malice in one desperate Effort; and which is now too much irritated to observe any longer the Rules of Decency, or to pretend any longer a Zeal for publick Happiness, an Ardour for Liberty, or Tenderness for the

"Had this Motion, Sir, been produced by laudable Defigns, it would have been recommended otherwise than by vehement Invectives and general Assertions; for as the End is, such generally are the Means: And it is not easily that a wise Man is persuaded of the Justice of that Intention, which he sees promoted either by Violence or Fallacy.

The Fallacy of the Argument used on this Occasion is too gross not to be discovered, and too contemptible not to be derided, were not the End proposed by it so atrocious as not to admit of the Prevalence of any Passion but Horror and Detestation. The Fallacy, Sir, consists in supposing, what is principally to be proved, that the Right Honourable Person on whom the Censure is to fall, has been for twenty Years not only the Chief but the Sole Director of all Foreign and Domestic Assairs; that he has at once levied Armies and raised Taxes, enacted Laws and ratified Treaties, and governed at the same Time the Council and the Parliament.

If, Sir, the Right Honourable Gentleman has not been the chief Adviser and Director of all National Affairs, the Motion must be without the least Degree of Justice or Propriety; because it will tend to fix an unjust Censure, and to punish one Man with perpetual Insamy for the Crimes of another. It will tend to harden the principal Agent, whoever he may be, in the Continuance of his wicked Practices; since he will suppose the publick Vengeance already satisfied, and will find that he is safe from Punishment, by being free from Suspicion.

If the Right Honourable Gentleman be not the Sole Author of these fatal Measures, it is evident that the Motion has arisen not from publick Spirit, not from a virtuous Detestation of corrupt Conduct, not from a Desire of reforming Aboses, and restoring to the British Name its ancient Dignity; but from narrow Views, and selfish Designs, from tordid interest, or viralent Malevolence. For why is one Man singled out for Vengeance among so many Associates in the same Crimes? Why is not the Panishment proportioned to the Guilt? and why is publick Justice desirauded or obstructed?

Of such Procedure, Sir, no other Account can be given, than that one Man is more feared or hated than the rest; nor can this Fear or Detellation be imputed to any other Cause than the Number of his Friends, or the Superiority of his Abilities; for sace his Wickedness appears not more enormous than that of others, he must be distinguished from the Crowd by some other Qualities.

Happy would the British Nation be, if this Ardour of Profecution, proceeded from any other Cause; if the Persons, who have so long declared themselves Enemies to the Right Honourable Gentleman, were not incited against him only by his Importance to the State, by the Vigour of his Understanding, and the Extent of his Knowledge; that Understanding which has enabled him to discover and disconcert all the Schemes, by which they have hitherto endeavoured to rise upon his Ruin; and that Knowledge which has been so successfully employed, in defending the Measures of the Government, and demonstrating the true Interest of the People.

They have long discovered, or imagined themselves to have discovered, that they are hindered from succeeding in their Designs only by his Industry, Instuence, and Capacity a and have therefore determined at any Rate to procure his Removal. What their real Designs are I shall not pretend to inform the House; but if we take a View of the different Persons who have concurred in the Opposition, and restlect upon the Contrariety of their Principles, Habits, and Conduct, it will not easily be supposed that they can be cemented either by Affection to the present Government, or by any uniform Principle except that of Interest; nor can it be conceived that they propose any other Changes, than such as may increase their own Fortunes, by investing them with the chief Posts of Profit and of Trust.

Such Suspicions, Sir, which must naturally arise upon the first View of this Chaos of Opposition reduced to Order and to Form, has been every Day confirmed by the Effects which have arisen from its Coalition; by an incessant Obstruction of the justest Measures, by a restless Turbulence of

publick Defertion of Equity and Reason.

The Motion I cannot but confider as the utmost Effort of Malice, the expiring Struggle of Fastion wearied and exhausted with sruitless Endeavours to disturb the Happiness and corrupt the Loyalty of the People: And tho' there is a Degree of Wickedness of which it is scarce reasonable to hope for a Reformation, yet I cannot but flatter myself that these Gentlemen, after having seen their tast Expedient bassed, and their most vigorous Assaults born with Patience, and repulsed with Ease, will at length desits for their own Sakes from opposing what they cannot prevent, and from encountering those by whom they are certain to be overcome.

I cannot but hope, Sir, that they may be prevailed on by the Confideration of their own Ease, to concur with the Measures of the Government; and that by a short Experience of the Satisfaction of Virtue, and the Peace of Loyalty, they may be induced to persevere with Sincerity in that Conduct, in which they were at first engaged only by Weariness, Vexation or Despair.

This at least I will promife them, that they will more probably attain, by such a Change of their Schemes, those Advantages which they are suspected of pursuing, with as much Ardour at least as the Interest of their Country; and that no Remembrance of past Injuries will incite the Gentleman against whom their Malice is this Day directed, to employ his Authority or Abilities against them; since I am convinced that he has hitherto rather pitied than hated them, and that he will be immediately reconciled to them upon their Return to their Duty.

This, Sir, I can holdly promife upon long Acquaintance with him, and frequent Experience of his Tenderness, Equity, Moderation and Candour: Qualities of which I am not, on this Occasion, either ashamed or asraid to declare, that they have endeared him to me; and which if his Enemies had possessed in the same Degree, this Motion had never

But whatever Influence personal Motives may have upon others, I find Reasons of a very different Kind, which have determined my Opinion on this Question: Reasons which arise only from Regard to Liberty, to Justice, and to Truth. The Measures which have been mentioned, as proper Grounds for the severest Censure, are such as I have hitherto approved; and I find not any new Arguments offered, by which I might be induced to condemn what I formerly desended.

I find, Sir, the supposed Guilt of all these supposed Miscarriages accumulated upon one Man, without the leaft Endeavour to prove that he was more criminal, with regard to fome, than any other Member of the Council; or with Respect to others, than any Member of Parliament by whom they were approved.

I easily foresee, that if this Motion be admitted, the Justice of Parliamentary Censures, and by Consequence their Authority and Essicacy is at an End; since it will at any Time be in the Power of a Majority, inslamed by Faction or Resentment, to punish those whom no Evidence is produced to convict; and therefore, I declare, that I shall vote against this Motion, and any other of the same Kind.

Then Mr Pitt spoke to the Effect following:

Mr Pitt.

As it has been observed that those, who have formerly approved the Measures of the Gentleman into whose Conduct we are now inquiring, cannot be expected to disavow their former Decisions, unless new Arguments are produced of greater Force than those which have formerly been offered; so the same Steadiness must be excused in those who have opposed them, unless they can now hear them better defended.

It is an established Maxim, Sir, that as Time is the Test of Opinions, Falsehood grows every Day weaker, and Truth gains upon Mankind. This is more eminently just in political Assertions, which often respect suture Events, and the remote Consequences of Transactions; and therefore never fail to be, by Time, incontestably verified or undeniably consuted. On many Occasions it is impossible to determine the Expediency of Measures, otherwise than by Conjecture; because almost every Step that can be taken may have a Tendency to a good as well as to a bad End: And as he that proposes, and those that promote it, may conceal their Intentions, till they are ripened into Execution, Time only can discover the Motives of their Demands, and the Principles of their Conduct.

For this Reason, Sir, it may easily be expected that bad Measures will be condemned by Men of Integrity when their Consequences are fully discovered; tho' when they were proposed, they might by plausible Declarations and specious Appearances, obtain their Approbation or Applause. Those, whose Purity of Intention, and Simplicity of Morals, exposed them to Credulity and implicite Considence, must refent the Arts by which they were deluded into a Concurrence with Projects detrimental to their Country; but of

or the real Intention steadily denied.

With Regard to such Gentlemen whose Neglect of political Studies, had not qualified them to judge of the Questions when they were first debated; and who, in giving their Suffrages were not so much directed by their own Conviction, as by the Authority of Men whose Experience and Knowledge they knew to be great, and whose Integrity they had hitherto found no Reason to distrust, it may be naturally expected that, when they see those Measures which were recommended, as necessary to Peace and Happiness, productive only of Confusion, Oppression, and Distress, they should acknowledge their Error and forsake their Guides, whom they must now discover to have been either ignorant, or treacherous; and by an open Recantation of their former Decisions, endeavour to repair the Calamities, which they have contributed to bring upon their Country.

The Extent and Complication of political Questions is such, that no Man can justly be ashamed of having been fometimes mistaken in his Determinations; and the Propensity of the human Mind to Confidence and Friendship is so great, that every Man, however cautious, however sagacious, or however experienced, is exposed sometimes to the Artifices of Interest, and the Delusions of Hypocrist; but it is the Duty, and ought to be the Honour, of every Man to own his Missake, whenever he discovers it, and to warn others against those Frauds which have been too successfully practifed upon himfelf.

"I am therefore, Sir, inclined to hope that every Man will not be equally pre-determined in the present Debate, and that as I shall be ready to declare my Approbation of Integrity and Wisdom, though they should be found where I have long suspected Ignorance and Corruption; so others will with equal Justice censure Wickedness and Error, though they should be detected in that Person, whom they have long been taught to reverence as the Oracle of Knowledge, and the Pattern of Virtue.

In political Debates Time always produces new Lights; Time can in these Enquiries never be neutral, but must always acquit or condemn. Time indeed may not always produce new Arguments against bad Conduct, because all its Consequences might be originally foreseen and exposed; but it must always consirm them, and ripen Conjectures into Certainty. Though it should therefore be truly afferted, that nothing is urged in this Debate which was not before mentioned and rejected, it will not prove that because the Arguments are the same, they ought to produce the fame Effect; because what was then only foretold, has now been feen and felt, and what was then but believed is now known.

But if Time has produced no Vindication of those Meafures, which were once suspected of Imprudence or of Treachery; it must be at length asknowledged that those Suspicions were just, and that what ought then to have been rejected ought now to be punished.

This, Sir, is for the most Part the State of the prefent Question. Those Measures which were once defended by sophistical Reasonings, or palliated by warm Declarations of Sincerity and disinterested Zeal for the publick Happiness, are found to be such as they were represented by those who opposed them. It is now discovered, that the Treaty of Hanover was calculated only for the Advancement of the House of Bourbon; that our Armies are kept up only to multiply Dependence, and to awe the Nation from the Exertion of its Rights; that Spain has been courted only to the Ruin of our Trade; and that the Convention was little more than an Artisce, to amuse the People with an idle Appearance of a Reconciliation; which our Enemies never intended.

Of the Stipulation which produced the memorable Treaty of Hanover, the Improbability was often urged; but the absolute Falsehood could not be proved but by the Declaration of one of the Parties. This Declaration was as length produced by Time, which was never favourable to the Measures of our Minister; for the Emperor of Germany afferted with the utmost Solemnity that no such Article was ever proposed, and that his Engagements with Spain had no Tendency to produce any Change in the Government of this Kingdom.

Thus it is evident, Sir, that all the Terrors, which the Apprehension of this Alliance produced, were merely the Operations of Fraud upon Cowardice; and that they were only raised by the artful French, to disunite us from the only Power, with which it is our Interest to cultivate an inseparable Friendship. This Disunion therefore may justly be charged upon the Minister, who has weakened the Interest of this Country, and endangered the Liberties of Europe.

If it be asked, Sir, how he could have discovered the Falshood of the Report, before it was consuted by the late Emperor? it may be easily answered, that he might have discovered it by the same Tokens which betray'd it to his Opponents, the Impossibility of putting it in Erecucution. For it must be confessed, that his French Informers, well acquainted with his Diposition to panic Fears, had used no Caution in the Contrivance of their Impossure, nor feem to have had any other View, than to add one Terror to another, to fink his Reason with Alarms, and to overbear him with Assonishment. When they found that he began to be disordered at the Danger of our Trade, from Enemies without Naval Forces; they easily discovered, that to make him the Slave of France, nothing more was necessary than to add, that these bloody Consederates had projected an Invasion, that they intended to add Slavery to Poverty, and to place the Pretender upon the Throne.

See the Memorial of M. de Palm, the Imperial Refident, to this Purpose, in the Appendix to Chandler's History, Vel. VIII.

'To be alarmed, Sir, into Vigilance, had been not unworthy of the firmest and most sagacious Minister; but to be frighted by such Reports into Measures, which even an Invasion could scarcely have justified, was at least a Proof of a Capacity not formed by Nature for the Administration of Government; and which it is therefore the Intent of this Motion to reduce to its proper Sphere, and to level with the rest of the Community.

If it be enquir'd what Advantage was granted by this Treaty to the French, and to what Inconveniences it has subjected this Nation? An Answer may very justly be refused, till the Minister or his Apologists shall explain his Conduct in the last War with Spain; and inform us why the Plate Fleet was spared, our Ships sacrificed to the Worms, and our Admiral and his Sailors possoned in an unhealthy Climate? Why the Spaniards in full Security laugh'd at our Armaments, and triumph'd in our Calamities?

The Lives of Hozier and his Forces, which were squandered by Compliance with France, are now justly to be demanded from this Man; he is now to be charged with the Murder of those unhappy Men, whom he exposed to Misery and Contagion, to pacify, on one hand, the Britons who called out for War, and to gratify, on the other, the French who infisted that the Spanish Treasures should not be seized.

The Minister who neglects any just Opportunity of promoting the Power, or encreasing the Wealth of his Country, is to be considered as an Enemy to his Fellow-Subjects; but what Censure is to be passed upon him who betrays that Army to a Defeat, by which Victory might be obtained; impoverishes the Nation, whose Affairs he is intrusted to transact by those Expeditions which might enrich it; who levies Armies only to be exposed to Pestilence, and compels them to perish in Sight of their Enemies without modesting them?

It cannot furely be denied that fuch Conduct may juilly Vol. XIII. e e produce a Censure, more severe than that which is intended by this Motion; and that he who has doomed Thousands to the Grave, who has co operated with foreign Powers against his Country, who has protected its Enemies and dishonoured its Arms, should be deprived not only of his Honours but of his Life; that he should be at least stripp'd of those Riches which he has amassed during a long Series of prosperous Wickedness; and not barely be hindered from making new Acquisitions, and encreasing his Wealth by multiplying his Crimes.

But no such Penalties, Sir, are now required; those, who have long stood up in Opp stion to him, give a Proof by this Motion, that they were not incited by personal Malice; fince they are not provoked to propose any arbitrary Censure, nor have recommended, what might be authorised by his own Practice, an Act of Attainder, or a Bill of Pains and Penalties. They desire nothing farther than that the Security of the Nation may be restored, and the Discontent of the People pacified, by his Removal from that Trust which he has fo long abus'd.

The Discontent of the People is in itself a Reason for agreeing to this Motion, which no Rhetorical Vindicator of his Conduct will be able to counterballance; for fince it is necessary to the Prosperity of the Government, that the People should believe their Interest favoured, and their Liberties protected; fince to imagine themselves neglected, and to be neglected, in reality must produce in them the same Suspicions and the same Distrust, it is the Duty of every faithful Subject whom his Station qualifies to offer Advice to his Sovereign, to persuade him for the Preservation of his own-Honour and the Affection of his Subjects, to remove from his Counfels that Man, whom they have long considered as the Author of persucious Measures, and a Favourer of arbitrary Power.

Mr Howe answered in Substance as follows.

Mr Howe.

- Whatever Opinion I may have formed, by long Observation and Experience, of the Moderation of the Party by which this Motion is supported, I could not have prevailed upon myself to expect that they would have mentioned it as a Proof of their Lenity and Forbearance; or that while they were endeavouring to punish without the least Evidence of a Crime, they would have added Insults to their Cruelty, and have ridiculed him, whom they were persecuting, with Panegyricks on their own Mercy.
- That they are now endeavouring, that Punishment may precede Conviction, is evident, fince they have not proved that any of the Measures, which they have been pleased to represent as Pernicious and Dishonourable, were advised by the Person against whom they direct their Malice; nor do they appear folicitous to discover the Criminal, so they may be permitted to deltroy an Adversary.

' For this Purpose, Sir, they have for many Years loaded him with Accusations, and represented him as the Author of those Miseries, which were entailed upon the Nation in the last Reign, by a long War and a dishonourable Peace; they have charged him with exalting, by the Treaty of Hanover, that House which owes the Continuance of its Power to the Peace of Utrecht; and have taught the Nation to believe that those Debts, which it has been his constant Endeavour to alleviate, were encreas'd by his Profusion or continued by his Artifices.

' Having, by a continual Series of fubtle Calumnies, alienated the People from the Government, and filled the Nation with Diffruit, Suspicion, and Resentment; having exalted the Rights of the Subject, till every Borough imagines itself intitled to dictate to the Parliament; and to long imputed every Calamity to the Ministry, that they are now charged with every Inconvenience that is felt or imagined to be felt by the Nation, whatever Cause may produce it; they at last throw aside their Disguise, and discover for what End they have so long flattered the Passions and corrupted the Opinions of the People, by declaring that the Discontent which they have railed, is a sufficient Reason for this Motion; and that the Man whom they have so long accused ought to be doomed to Infamy and Obscurity, because he is at last suspected by those, who have no Opportunity of knowing his Character, or of examining his Conduct.

The Buliness, Sir, of the Parliament is to hold the Ballance between the Court and the People, and to preserve at once the Dignity of the Crown, and the Rights of the Nation; nor are we to fuffer the Servants of the King to be torn from him by popular Fury, any more than the Liberties of the People to be facrificed to the Ambition of a Minister.

* That the People are generally discontented, may perhaps be true; but what is more common than popular Complaints without Cause, or for Evils, which could not have been prevented. That they are enraged against this Gentleman though it has not been proved, I shall not at present deny ; because it is necessary that before their Resentment is gratified it should be proved to be just, and till such Proof is produced, I shall oppose the Motion. e e 2

THE REAL PROPERTY AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY AND

Mr Heathcote.

Can it then be asked in this House, why the People are exasperated against this Person, and whether they have had any Provocations to Resentment? Can Proof be required of the Ardour, with which the whole Nation wishes for his Discharge? And can it be doubted, whether his Continuance in Power is inconsistent with the Security and Happiness of the Kingdom, the Preservation of Peace, and the Promotion of Loyalty?

To conceal in judicial Enquiries, what is known to those who profess to declare their Sentiments, is at least not to speak the subole Truth, and may be censured as a Proof of Partiality: To affect Ignorance of publick Facts, in hopes that their Opponents may happen to forget them, is not more difingenuous than contemptible, when they are so recent, that they cannot but be remembered, or so atrocious that they cannot be forgiven.

To little Purpose, Sir, therefore, has the Gentleman, who has so zealously attempted, with whatever Intention, to secure the Favour of the Minister, appeared ignorant of the open Declarations of the People in all Parts of the Kingdom, when the execrable Scheme of Excise was lately deseated: A Time which the Enemies of Liberty do not willingly recollect, but which will always be celebrated as the Æra of our Rescue from Slavery, by those who know the Importance of Commerce, or the Blessings of Freedom.

At that Time this worthy Minister, this amiable Benefactor of Mankind, was sligmatized with the highest Degree of Infamy, which the People cou'd express; he was dragg'd along the Streets in Essign through the Shouts of innumerable Crouds, with the universal Triumph of all Ranks and Orders of Men, and was thrown into the Fires kindled in

of the People is sufficient to justify an Address for the Removal of a Minister, this Motion can admit of no longer Debate; for he who doubts whether this Person be generally detested; he who does not know that his Name is never mentioned, but by his Vassals, without Execrations; that his Counsels are considered by every honest Man as the Causes of our Misery and all our Disgrace; and that the Time of his Degradation or Destruction would be added to those Festival Days on which the Overthrow of arbitrary and republican Schemes are annually commemorated, must live in utter Ignorance of the State of his Country; and must have past his Days without Inquiry, and without Observation, either Clouded

'For my Part it has cost me no laborious Searches to know what is daily to be heard in every Place of publick Resort; that he is looked upon as a general Enemy, whom it is every Man's Duty to pursue, and Interest to destroy. And since it cannot be expected that his Majesty should long retain the Assections of his People, while a Man like this is believed to enjoy his Considence and instructe his Counsels, I think it impossible to give a more important Proof of my Loyalty, than by agreeing to the present Motion.

Mr Henry Pelham spoke next in Favour of Sir Robert Wal- Mr H. Pelham, pole, whose Speech we have given at large in the foregoing Volume, P. 78. He was answered by Mr Lyttelton as sollows:

Sir.

The captivating Shew of Equity, and the Candour, with Mr. Lytteltonwhich the Honourable Gentleman has delivered his Sentiments on this Occasion, could not but raise Esteem in those who are most zealous for the Cause which he has undertaken to oppose, did he not employ it to conceal Facts too evident for Disguise, and to palliate Measures in Defence of which, the most artful Eloquence must be exhausted in vain.

That these Measures are really not easily to be vindicated, he has indeed implicitly confessed, by thinking it necessary to deny, that his Friend can be properly considered as the Author of them; and by requiring Proof to Day, of what every Man in the Nation knew Yesterday, and will know to Morrow, that he has been for twenty Years the chief Director of all Foreign and Domestick Measures.

Surely that Cause must be desperate that can require a Desence like this; furely he can have little Considence in the Integrity of that Man, whom he endeavours to shelter from Examination, by denying what he is conscious that every Man knows and almost every Man can prove.

The present Motion is only for an Address to his Majesty, not that any Criminal should be punished, but that a Man suspected of Crimes should be removed from Trust: And therefore this Address may justly be promoted by every Man, whom his own Observation or the Assertions of others have induced to form such Suspicions, even though they should not be consirmed by such Evidence as might be required in the lower Courts.

Those who have urged against this Motion, that it is not supported by any Precedent, seem to have forgotten, or perhaps hope that others may forget, a Precedent, which cannot be decently eluded on this Occasion, because it was established by the Influence of the Person, whose Conduct we are

The Peace of Utrecht, and all the other Negotiations which were carried on during the Administration of the Earl of Oxford, are well known to have been considered in the Parliament, and to have been ratified after long Dehates by a very great Majority, a Majority which the Minister could not be charged with gaining by Bribes, or retaining by Penfions: A Majority of Members elected without pecuniary Influence, and voting without any other apparent Direction than their own Opinions; and who, though they are now generally imagined to have been mistaken, were never yet charged with being corrupt.

' Yet was not this Sanction sufficient to secure the noble. Lord in the next Reign, from the Violence of Profecution and the Rigours of Imprisonment: Prosecutions incited by this Gentleman's Malignity, and Imprisonment promoted by his Counsels. In Defence of this Precedent, I shall only urge, that if such a Process was equitable at that Time, it may, fafely be imitated; and that though it should be acknowledged even by those that then countenanced and defended it, to have been Precipitate and Cruel, it may justly be practised on this Occasion; since it is reasonable that the Authors of evil Counfels should feel the Effects of their own Schemes. and that every Man should find that Treatment which others have received from him.

Such Severities, however, are not intended by the Advocates for the present Motion, who are content to put an End to the Miseries of the Nation, without punishing him to whom they think them jultly imputed; who intend not Vengeance but Security; and who by removing the Minister from the Presence of his Sovereign, from which he has long; driven every Man that opposed him, and from those Counfels which he has always directed to the Detriment of the Nation, propose not to gratify Resentment, but to prevent De-Struction.

Hereupon the Hon. Mr Edward Harley flood up, and spoke as in our Tavelfib VOLUME, p. 100, and then left the House; and was follow'd by Mr Robert Harley.

Lord Cornbury spoke next in Substance as follows.

Lord Cornbury.

Sir, ' I doubt not but it will be expected by those who have made and justified the Motion, that I who have generally opposed the Measures of the Administration, should readily concur in censuring the Man to whose Counsels they are imputed, and by whose Influence they are supposed to have obtained Approbation; and perhaps it may not be without incurring some Suspicion of criminal Inconsistency, that I declare my Disapprobation of the Method of Profecution which is now proposed; a Suspicion which I shall however try to avoid, by laying before the House the Reasons of my Conduct, and the Grounds of my Opinion.

There has always appeared to me a great Difference in the Rules which political and perfonal Questions require to be observed. In Questions relating to the publick Affairs, it is rational to suppose those Measures wrong which are not proved to be right; but in criminal Profecutions it is a Maxim in the Law, that every Man shall be supposed Innocent till it is shown by Evidence that he is Guilty. In opposing Measures therefore, I am at Liberty to require Evidence; in attacking Persons, I am obliged to produce it; nor does the Man whom I accuse of Misconduct, need to make any other Defence than that of denying the Charge.

In the present Case, Sir, a Right Honourable Member of this House is accused of dishonouring his Sovereign, of betraying his Trust, of weakening the Influence, embarrassing the Commerce, and obstructing the Arms of his Country; of giving up the Rights of the Nation by cowardly Negotiations, and attacking its Liberties by an Attempt to introduce oppressive Laws and cruel Exactions. A Charge in the highest Degree criminal, and which ought therefore to be supported

But instead of Evidence produced to prove the particular Articles of this complicated Accusation, we have heard hitherto only florid Declamations, which may amuse but cannot convince, and violent Invectives which may fire the Passions for a Moment, but which can have no lasting Effect upon the Judgment. These have been answered by Rhetorick equally engaging, and Assertions equally consistent; but to which the Laws have given this Advantage, that we are obliged to admit them till they are consuted, and by Consequence to reject those of the Accusers till they are proved.

That those, who have hitherto distinguished themselves by an invariable Opposition to the ministerial Schemes, should reject the present Motion, has been mentioned as an Inconsistency not to be imagined, as an Absurdity which could not be supposed without an Apology. So easily do the wisest Men suffer their Desires to influence their Reason; and so difficult is it for any Man, strongly convinced of the Truth of his Opinion, to believe that others can justify themselves in Differing from it.

For my Part, Sir, I can eafily conceive, that many may have condemned all these Transactions which have been represented as the Grounds of the present Motion; without thinking that the Motion deserves their Concurrence, or that by rejecting it, they shall forseit the Praise of Steadiness and Perseverance; since nothing is more evident than that this Motion may be unjust, though the Opposition should be supposed hitherto to have acted under the Direction of infallible Guides, and all the Schemes and Measures of the Minister to have been detrimental to the Nation.

To justify Opposition it is only to be proved that the Measures proposed, were improper or unjust; but to support this Motion it must be shewn that they are the Proposals of a particular Man. It has been hitherto indifferent in the Debate, whether they were Errors or Crimes; whether the Authors of them were deceived or corrupted; it is now necessary to prove them the Consequences of wicked Intentions, of Intentions so much vitiated as to deserve the publick Censure of the Parliament.

There remains one Objection more, which in my Opinion requires to be answered; the Advocates for the Motion seem to endeavour to advance a Charge of accumulative Guilt, to aggravate one Crime by the Super-Addition of another, and rather to intend a popular Censure than a legal Condemna-

I suppose no Man will suspect that an unjust Partiality in favour of the Gentleman, whose Conduct is now the Subject of Examination, influences me to censure this Method of Proceeding; since no Man can want Reasons against it of the greatest Weight: Reasons which deserve the closest Attention from every Man of Prudence and Virtue, of every Man who regards his own Sasety, or the Happiness of future Generations. No Man whose Judgment is not overborn by his Resentment, and whose Ardour for Vengeance has not extinguished every other Motive of Action, can resolve to give the Sanction of his Voice to a Method of Prosecution, by which the Good and Bad are equally endangered; and which will make the Administration of publick Affairs destructive to the purest Integrity and the highest Wisdom.

That such must be the Consequence of Charges like this will appear no longer a paradoxical Affertion, if it be remembered, that Humanity is a State of Imperfection; that the strictest Virtue sometimes declines from the Right, and that the most consummate Policy is by false Appearances, or accidental Inattention betrayed into Error. For how soon must that Man be destroyed, whose high Station exposes him to the continual Observation of Envy and Malevolence, whose minutest Errors are carefully remark'd, and whose casual Failings are treasured up as a Fund of Accusations. How soon, if trivial Transgressions shall be accumulated into capital Crimes, may the best Man compleat the Sum of his Offences and be doom'd to Ignominy, to Exile, or to Death?

In criminal P oceedings particular Regard has been had to Precedents; and furely the Effects of a former Accufation of this Kind, give us no Encouragement to the Repetition of it. From a Charge of accumulative Treason, the Faction of the latt Age proceeded to the Usurpation of boundless Authority, the Subversion of our Constitution, and the Murder of the King.

I shall therefore continue to suppose every Man Innocent till he appears from legal Evidence to be Guilty; and to reject any Charge of accumulative Guilt, upon the fame Principles of Regard to Liberty, to Virtue, to Truth, and to our Constitution, by which I have hitherto regulated my Conduct; and for the same Reasons, for which I have condemned the Measures of the Administration, I shall now oppole the present Motion.

Then Sir Robert Walpole role up and spoke to this Effect : Sir R. Walpole.

As this Debate has been already protracted to an unufual Length, I hope the Request I am going to make will not be thought improper or unreasonable. It is, Sir, that I may know the whole Accusation against me before I offer my Defence; lest new Charges should produce a Necessity of new Replies, and the House either be wearied with needless Altercations, or be reduc'd to the Necessity of Determining without a complete Knowledge of the Quellion.

This Method I hope will meet with no Opposition, fince it will give those who are inclin'd to censure me, an Opportunity of hearing without Interruption the whole complicated Charge; and shew those whom a nearer Knowledge of my Conduct may have induc'd to think favourably of me, that I am not afraid of hearing all that Error or Malice can fuggest; that I do not defire to shelter myself in Consusion; and that I do not doubt of confirming their Sentiments by a De-

Lord Tyrconnel.

As nothing is more necessary in our Proceedings than Order, and that Perspicuity which results from it; as the Accusation must naturally precede the Defence, and as a continued Discourse is more easily conceived, and more accurately retained, than an interrupted and tumultuous Difputation, I think the Request made by the Right Hon. Gentleman seasonable and just.

The Motion pasfes in the Ne-

Thereupon Mr Pulteney stood up, and open'd a long Charge against Sir Robert Walpole, which we have already given in the Proceedings of the Seventh Session, Page 101. And Sir Robert, having made his Defence, as therein related at large, Page 114. withdrew.

Besides the Gentlemen, whose Speeches we have given in this and the former Volume, Mr Bootle, Mr Greenville, Mr Fazakerley, Mr Boone, Sir John Hinde Cotton, MrHume Camp- Mr Waller, Mr Ord, and Mr Hume Campbell, spoke for the Motion.

And besides those before-mentioned against the Motion, were Mr Henry Archer, Lord Eufton, Mr Leathes, Sir William Lowther, Mr Hay, Mr Legg, Col. Cholmondeley, Mr Sir W. Lowther, Henry Fox, Mr Attorney General, Sir Richard Corbett, Mr Clarke, Mr Sollicitor General, Mr Danvers, Mr Winnington, Sir William Yonge, Mr Bowes, and Mr Southwell.

Mr Shippen declar'd, 'That he looked on this Motion as only a Scheme for turning out one Minister, and bringing in another: That as his Conduct in Parliament had always been regulated with a View to the Good of his Country, without any Regard to his own private Interest, it was quite indifferent to him, who was in or who was out; and he would give Mr Winnington, himself no Concern in the Question.' Having said this he withdrew, and was followed by Thirty four of his Friends.

> Sir Charles Wager in particular declar'd, 'That, to his Knowledge, Sir Robert Walpole was as forward and zealous to promote the War as any of his Majesty's Council, and that nothing was a Moment wanted in his Province, That of iffuing Money: That he had never interfer'd in recommending any one Person to the Admiralty Board; and that if he had ever done so, He (Sir Charles) would have thrown up all his Preferments.

> The Debate began at Six in the Morning, and held 'till Four the next Morning; when the Question being put upon Mr Sandys's Motion, it was resolved in the Negative by 2 Majority of 184 Voices.
